are the dogs themselves going to. From the time of the writing of the first lines of Homer's Iliad, it has been the peculiar office of dogs to tear and to destroy, but not until the 19th century has it entered into the hearts of the legislature to destroy all the dogs themselves From time immediate the unerselves. legislature to destroy all the dogs themselves.
From time immemorial the shepherd's dog especially has been petted and praised, and poets have sung in honor of him, and now it is for the sake of the sheep most especially that laws are being passed to cur-tail the length of his existence in Massachusetts.—

What is most singular is that the class than What is most singular, is that the oldest shep herds and the most modern seem in all th to be coming round to the same point. David, eften and beautifully as he introduces the figare of the sheep, always speaks contemptu-onsly of dogs. The Jews hated them most cordially, and our wisest Legislatures are be-ginning to do the same increasingly, and laws graning to do the same increasingly, and have of greater and greater stringency are being passed against them every year. Every year year that numbers are destroyed by the authorities of all our cities, yet still new ones steal in from the country, as if they came hoping to get a share of the reward offered for their cap-

"Leading a dog's life," even in the country, is henceforth going to be no enviable thing in Massachusetts. The dog is not, henceforth, to be allowed, in any case, to live without a register, for which the owner must without a register, for which the owner must pay a dollar annually, or five dollars a year, if a female. Such a salic law as all this will rapidly kill off all the inferior breeds, at 50 cents per head. In addition to this, every dog must wear a collar, with its owner's name legibly engraved upon it. If, notwithstanding this, the dog does any mischief, the owner is answerable, not merely to the amount, but double amount, of the injury sustained, even in the owner's own premises. If any person is assaulted by a dog, or his cow or sheep or lambs are worried, he may kill the offender at once, and it is justifiable cani-cide. Or if he only sees him walking out of any enclosure, and without a keeper, and fancies that the dog looks at him with an evil eye, and he can go and swear that he suspects the dog to be "mischiorous" or dangerous, the dog must be either shot or confined henceforth, and the owner is answerable in treble the sum for all damages thereafter, and he may be killed at sight if he walks abroad. From the fund thus raised, all damages made by unknown dogs are to be made good, if it will go far enough. Such is Massachusetts legislation on the dog question, and all the agricultural papers of the Union are setting their face against the quadrupeds increasingly. As a means of defence against thieves, the sagacity and courage of dogs are valuable. In frontier life, they cannot well be dispensed with, and even in journeys to the extreme North, their powers of endurance, fuithfulness and strength make them invaluable. But in the older-settled States, the mischief they do is so much greater than the good, and falls so heavily upon those who receive no benefit from them that all must admit the substantial justice of laws like those of Massachusetts. The dog can and will climb fences, worry cattle, kill sheep, and endanger the limbs and lives of children and endanger the limbs and lives of children and grown-up people, twenty times where he does good once. We live in an age of political economy. Sir Walter Scott might write poetry and prose about dogs, and did so until he was actually proved to be the author of the Waverly novels by that very habit, before he avowed the fact publicly. Byron, too, could and did write up his dogs quite respectably. But, in sober prose, their crimes against society so far outweigh their virtues, that, in proportion as communities get more peaceful and ety so far outweigh their virtues, that, in proportion as communities get more peaceful and cultivated, their utilities every year become fewer, and the annoyance and expense of keeping them greater. All the good they do can be better done by other agents, and therefore to "die like a dog" will be in future, even more than heretofore, significant of an unwept, unhonored end.—Ledger.

cronsed with time, and about four months since a fourth was added to them, by hair falling off the top of my head and threatening to make me bald.

In this unpleasant predicament, I was induced to try Wood's Hair Restorative, mainly to arrest the falling off of my hair, for I had really no expectation that gray hair could ever be restored to its original color except from dyes. I was, however, greatly surprised to find after the use of two bottles only, that not only the falling off was arrested, but the color was restored to the gray hairs and sensibility to the scalp, and dandruft ceased to form on my head, very much to the gratification of my wife, at whose solicitation I was induced to try it.

For this, among the many obligations I owe to her sex, I strongly recommend all husbands who value the admiration of their wives to profit by my example, and use it if growing gray or getting bald. Very respectfully, BEN. A. LAVENDER.
