Mr. Douglas at Bunker Hill,

n introductory and welcoming address, Judge had a better right to vote than the niggor. ouglas addressed a crowd of 3,000 or 4,000 rsons, from the western stops, leading from igh street to the monument grounds, as for-

Mr. Mayor and Fellow-citizens : I have just countied from a pilgrimage to Lexington, pre-scattory to visiting this sacred spot, which of ill the battle-fields and all the places conso-rated to patriotism by the blood of our Ravoitionary fathers, is dearest to the American [Applause.] There is not an Americitizen upon the face of the broad conti-at, no matter whether at the South or North; hins of the North-west or the shores of Pacific, who does not claim for himself nd his postority a share in the glories that unient was intended to commeniorate. it may imagine the monument is peculiar Charlestown, and that you have a deeper erest in it than an American citizen abroad; ut be assured that no one of you can claim a reater pride in the work itself; or the glorious

cods which it common orates, than the fellow-tizens of my own Illinois

Mr. Mayor, this has been to ino a day long be chorished and remembered, for to-day I tre seen the spot where the first American s shed that gave rise to the American volution, and now I witness the scene of hat struggle, which, beyond all others, gave mpetus to the Revolution which resulted in independence and liberty. Let the sons those honored sires prove true to the prinoles of their fathers, by which alone the Reblic can be maintained in its purity forever. he Revolution originated in the assertion by he people of the Colonies of the right of selfvornment by each Colony, in evorything reand the Crown in all things Imperial and not Colonial, when they attended to the general Cor welfare, and did, not inforfere, with the local Free nd domestic affairs of the Colonies. But our thers said you must not interfere with our resides and our hearthstones. We must ave the right to make our own laws and reulate our internal affairs without interference m the British Parliament. The Revolution vas fought in defence of that great principle local self-government. May we be faithful OA that great principle, and nover let it be vio-FAI ted in State, Territory, Province, or Colony. we only remain faithful to this fundament-TIMOTHYSEED. principle, and do not interfere with our eighbors, there can be peace forever between North and the South, the East and the West. There are institutions in Massachu-setts peculiar to herself. They differ from hose of Illinois, the Southern States, and the Pacific coast.

You have received me here with open arms. You have warmly welcomed me, and shown me everything curious or sacred in the history of our country; and I trust when I come of our country; and I trust when I come among you, I shall phy a proper respect to atthouity, and render obedience to the Inwa. But if you find me complaining because: I do not like your laws and domestic affairs, you will say, while you cannot but regret my dis-pleasure, our laws were made for us and not for you, and if I do not like them I can go back to Illinois; and, Mr. Mayor, permit me to say to you, in return for your kindly sontiments and this welcome to Bunker Hill, if you will do me the honor of making us a visit, I vill take pleasure and pride in welcoming you o Illinois, but upon the express consideration. that you will obey our how spress consideration that you will obey our how, respect our insti-tutions, and not interface with our domestic program, a 16 your should complain of our laws, while we should regret the fitet, yet we wild say that they are our laws and not ours. We made them for ourselves and not for you. They are adapted to our condition and wants, and if you do not like them you und wants, and if. you do not like them you payment, and thuse having claims will present them nust go back to Massachusetts, where you will for settlement to JOSEPIL W. PATTON, find better ones. So in the Southern States. If we go to Charleston, or New Orleans, it tion't become us to tell the authorities they have had laws and institutions. If they are good laws they will reap a benefit from them if evil, let them bear the burden till it makes them wise chough to throw it off by making better laws; and especially when you go to Kansas or Nebraska, where is assembled so much of the energy, eutorprise, and intelligence of the country, do not interfere with their local regulations. "I may utter one truth without offence-being a New England man : New England is an emigrating country .--When a New England farmer has two sons, and one is a little wild and reckloss, but in-telligent, that one thinks his native valley too small for him. He starts for the West, goes into the wilderness or upon the prairies to carve out his fortune and make a man of himself by his energies. The other son, more obedient, less ambitious, less energetie, and a little more lazy, stays at home to be supported by his father, instead of going West and supporting himself. ' / Thus we draw the bold, energetic, and industrious to the West, and Icave behind the well-behaved gentleman to live
