A Curious Affair.

Some eighty or a hundred years ago, the hody of a man was found in the Tiber at Rome.
It was recognised as that of a porter, well known about the city, but a stranger thing was that a second body (also that of a man) was found at the same time tied up in a sack which was strongly stitched on to the collar which was strongly stitched on to the collar of the coat of the porter. This body was not so easily recognized, but the strangeness of the circumstances set all the authorities immediately to work in the greatest carnest, and excited much interest in the city. Before long, suspicion arose, which attached itself to a woman of doubtful character, who lived in the outskirts, and whose husband had all at once disappeared. All, however, that was known, was this, that she had lived unbappily with him. Nothing could be discovered of brought home to her, beyond the fact that he was gone, and of course she maintained that he had left her, and that she was a much injured person. And thus, as there was no proof, after a while the talk of the affair was dying out, when at once it was fanned into a flame again; the suspected house was revisited, and the woman actually brought to confess the truth-that she had murdered her husband and caused, likewise, the death of the porter. Up in this, without further ado, she was arrested, and had to undergo her trial. The obtaining this confession, and the discovery of what had baffled the wisest heads in Rome, caused a very great sensation, but nobody seemed to know how it had been brought about. Upon her trial, she said she murdered her husband out of jealousy, and with no help from any human creature. The g eat difficulty she found was in disposing of the body. At last she hit upon this contriva ice. She crammed it into a sack, and sent for a porter with whom she was acquainted. It was then the dusk of evening. On his arrival, she representes that she had been cleaning out her house, and had collected a great mass of rubbish, which she did not well know what to do with, or how to get rid of; she thought it a good plan to stuff it all into a sack, and have it thrown into the river. It was heavy, she said, but she would pay him well for his job, and give him refreshment before he started with his load. The matter thus arranged, they supped and caroused together, and she pled him so with drink that he was well nigh overcome. She then brought out the sack, and waile pretending to a ljust it to his shoulder, stitched it strongly to the collar of his coat, telling him all he had to do when he got to the middle of the bridge was to lear it toward the edge, and chuck the sack as far as he could over the parapet, so as to get i clear ort of the way into the current, and she wou d give him his money when he came back; which of course, he never did. She could not tell, she said, how it had been found out, but she supposed God and the Virgin Mother had blought it to light; that was the whole truth, b. ought it to light; that was the whole truth, she added, and all she had to tell. When the trial had arrived at this point, a young extensive Steam Works on East Main st., Carlisle, a lawyer stepped forward and asked her " if she hal ever told anybody what she had done or had any accomplice who could have divulged it?" "Na" size said, "nobody had helped her, and they might well supp so she would not be such a fool as to tell it to any living creature." "What nobody?" the lawyer asked. 'No," said she; "only my confessor." Here was the solution of the whole business, and the lawyer soon discovered that the confessor had a brother in the galleys, and calling to mind an old custom that if a galley slave can be the means of bringing a worse criminal than himself to justice, he received his freedom, he arrive I at the conclusion that the galley slave had furnished the clue, which turned out to be the fact. The woman escaped punishment, as the discovery had been made through a breach of the confessional. The father confessor absconde las soon as possible. The young lawyer rapidly rose to emi-

As he increased in size, he was sufficiently tame to be handled, and came when called, and he was allowed the liberty of going and coming at his own choice, which he availed himself of by soaring out of sight, and being gone several hours at a time. Lately, having been plagued by the men on the range, he had became fierce, and clubs were no casary, at times, to keep him at a distance. A lad, aged thirteen years, called the eagle from a tree, ho ding a piece of meat. The bird descended with such swiftness that he frightened the boy, who dropped the meat, when the eagle made fight at him. The youngster started and fell. The bird hovered when the eagle made fight at him. The Perry and Dauphin cos., to the owners of which we youngster started and fell. The bird hovered over him, clutched at him with his talons, but appeared afraid to seize him on account of the boy kicking his feet incessantly at him. Mr. Hascomb hearing the noise, rushed to the rescue, and commenced whirling it about, striking at each revolution, the head of the bird against a tree, until he perfectly stunned him, when the boy caught hold of the other wing, and keeping the wings extended, was safe from the attacks of the bird. A third person was then called to their assistance, who threw a noose over the eagle's head, and then succeeded in tying his legs, making him safely a prisoner. Mr. Hascomb thinks the by would have been overpowered by the eagie, had be not come to the rescue in time, and e sincerely wished the boy and himself out of the affray while making so many unsuccessful attempts to stun the bird against a
