Military Pig.

During the last war with Great Britain, a very remarkable circumstance occurred in connection with the invasion of Canada. A company of Kentucky volunteers destined for Shelby's army had their rendezvous at Harrodsburg, in Kentucky, and formed a sort of nucleus or rallying point for the military recruits of that part of the country. When they marched from Harrodsburg towards the Ohio river, having got a mile or two on their way, they noticed two pigs fighting, and delayed their march to see it out. After they had resumed their march, the pig which had been the victor in the contest, was observed to follow them.

At night, when they encamped, the pig found a shelter near, and halted also. The next day the pig accompanied the troops as before; and thus it marched every day and halted every night with the soldiers, or near them. When they came opposite Cincinnati, at which place the troops were to cross the Ohio in a ferry-boat, the pig, on getting to the water's edge, promptly plunged in and swam across, and then waited on the other side until the whole cortege crossed over, and then renewed its post upon one side of the moving column. Thus the animal kept up with the troops until they crossed the State of Ohio and reached Lake Erie. On the journey, as the men grew familiar with their comrade, it became a pet, receiving a share of the rations issued to the soldiers, and destitute of provisions as the troops found themselves at times, no one thought of putting the knife to the throat of their fellow-soldier. What they had was still shared, and if the pig fared as scantily as the rest at times, it still grunted on, and manifested as much patriotism in his own line as bipeds it accompanied did in theirs. At the margin of the Lake she embarked with the troops, and went as far as Bass Island. But when offered a passage over into Canada, she obstinately refused to embark a second time. Some of the men attributed her conduct to constitutional scruples, and observed that she knew it was contrary to the Constitution to force a militia pig over the line. She therefore had leave to remain.

After the campaign had closed, the troops re-crossed the Lake having left some of their horses on the American side. As soon as the line was formed, to the great surprise of the troops, there was the pig on the right of the line, ready to resume her march with the rest! By this time the winter frosts had set in, and the animal suffered greatly on the homeward march. She made out, however, to reach Maysville, where the troops recrossed the Ohio river. There she gave out, and was placed in trusty hands by Gov. Shelby, and finally taken to the Governor's home, where she passed the rest of her days in ease and indolence.

There are many in Kentucky who can attest the truth of this remarkable story.

The Wolf.

Mr. Atkinson has sketched with his usual graphic vigor, the situation of himself and his party of Lalmucks, when surrounded by wolves in Mongolia. They were encamped for the night on the open steppe on the banks of a little lake, when suddenly the howling of the terrible wolves was heard at a distance. The men quickly collected their horses, and prepared to receive the assailants. The fire was nearly out, but it was thought best to allow them to approach, and then by a little fresh fuel obtain light enough for a fair shot. It was not long before the padding of their feet was heard as they galloped towards the party, and presently a savage howl arose. The men threw some dry bushes on the embers, and blew up a bright flame, which sent its red glare far around, disclosing the pack with ears and tails erect, and flashing eyes. At a signal, five rifles and a double barrel poured in a volley with deadly effect, as the horrible howling revealed. Snarling and shrieking, the pack drew off, but the Lalmucks declared they would return.

Soon the terror of the horses announced the re-approach of marauders, and they could be heard stealing round between us and the lake, dividing into two packs, so as to approach on opposite sides. Presently the glare of their eyeballs was seen, and their grisly forms pushing one another on. Again the bullets speed, and the shrieking packs again retreated, but only to keep watch at a little distance.

The night now grew very dark and all the fuel was exhausted. Presently, a distant howling announced the approach of a new pack, on whose arrival the old ones, which had been silently biding their time began to manifest their presence by jealous growls, which soon gave way to a general fight among themselves. Some of the men now, well armed, crept along the margin of the lake to collect some fuel, which was then placed on the fire. The flame was blown up, and a group of eight or ten wolves was seen within fifteen paces, with others beyond.—The rifles once more cracked, and the packs with a frightful howl scampered off.

In the morning eight wolves were lying dead and the bloody tracks showed that many others had carried away mortal wounds, the reminiscenses of this frightful night.

THE FOUNDATION OF CHARACTER.—The groundwork of all manly character is veracity. That virtue lies at the foundation of everything solid. How common it is to hear parents say, "I have faith in my child so long as he speaks the truth. He may have many fault, but I know he will not deceive me. I build on that confidence." They are right. It is a lawful and just ground to build upon. And that is a beautiful confidence. Whatever errors temptation may betray a child into, so long as brave, open truth remains, there is something to depend on—there is anchor ground—there is substance at the centre. Men of the world feel so about one another. They can be tolerant and forbearing so long as their erring brother is true. It is the fundamental virtue. Ordinary commerce can hardly proceed a step without a good measure of it. If we cannot believe what others say to us, we cannot act upon it, and to an immense extent that is saying we cannot act at all. Truth is a common interest. When we defend it, we defend the basis of all social order. When we vindicate it, we vindicate our own foothold. When we plead for it, it is like pleading for the air of health we breathe. When you undertake to benefit a lying man, it is like putting your foot into the mire.—F. D. Huntington.

☞ 'Can you tell me, Jim where they get so much corn from to manufacture into whiskey?' 'Why, no,' says Jim; 'but I can tell very well where the corn comes from after the whiskey is made.'

☞ My five-years old boy sometimes says queer things. One day he said to his little sister, 'When I get wings, I'll take you up where God is, 'cause your too little to go alone—and then, will you be afraid to stay with the angels while I go back and get mam ma

☞ Col. Colt, of Hartford, has offered his services to the Governor of Connecticut to raise a regiment, and has agreed to arm the men with breech-loading rifles at his own expense. These arms, which are of the latest improvement, would sell in market for $50,000. The regiment is being rapidly raised.
