The Rebels came determinedly across the field, firing as they advanced, until General Sumner ordered our troops up at double quick to a charge.

The Rebels kept their position for a moment and then fell back to the rear of their latteries. Meagher's brigade, however sucreeded in charging right upon the guns of a Virginia battery, two of which they hauled off, spiked, and chopped the carriages to nicces. The Eighty-eight, Sixty-third and Sixty-ninth participated in this gallant act. It was here that the brave Col. Pierce, of the Twenty ninth Massachusetts Regiment, formerly Gen. Pierce, of Big Bethel fame, lost an arm. It was taken off by a solid shot.

Night came on, but put no end to the carnage. The steady roar of cannon, and the sharp, quick ring of musketry, now bursting into volleys, how degenerating to that rasping noise made by file firing, filled the whole air. The darkness was lit up by the fitful flashes, and, to camplete the awful picture, the woods were set on fire: by bursting shells, and configration painted fiery terrors on the sky.
