This is the most difficult of all bee-man agement; and no rules can be laid down that will prove entirely successful in all cases. I have tried the most of the systems in practice, and will now briefly give my opinions after twenty years' trial. I object to wintering in cellars; for the reason that they are too damp, and cause the combs to meald and the bees to become unfor the purpose, does very well, if the walls are so made as to prevent the sudden changes of weather from cold to warm from affecting the temperature of the atmosphere within in a great degree. There is no danger from the cold, but only from the mild and ometimes quite warm weather of January,

If such buildings are constructed of wood, there should be a double wall, and filled in between with sawdust. If made of brick, there ought to be an open space between the two walls, and left open, by which means the temperature of the interior is generally uni-

Bees, perhaps, winter as well in "clamps as in any other way, made as follows: First lay down two scantlings, 3 x 4 or less, parallel to each other, upon which the hives are set, about December: 1st, in a row, and as close together as may be. The row of hives may be extended 10, 20 or 50 feet. On either side of the lives are to be placed boards, cut to the right length, so as to form a steep roof, and battened over the cracks so as to cut to the right length, so as to form a steep articles useful to housekeepers which the public are roof, and battened over the cracks so as to especially invited to call and see, at the old stand make it water-tight. A couple of narrow hoards may be nailed together at the edges, to form a cap, and thus prevent any rain from leaking in at the ridge. The ends are to be closed on the same principle, as far as practicable, so that there shall be no light entering the clamp. At each end, near the ground, an opening must be made large enough to admit a steam-pipe, or wooden box five or six inches square, open at both ends. to admit a current of air to pass through the clamp, which is very essential to keep the bees healthy. Over the ends of these pipes or boxes should be placed wire-cloth, to prevent rats and mice from entering and destroying the honey and bees. It will be necessary to see that the flow of air through these passages is not obstructed by snow during the winter; and they should be so arranged as to white

Some people excavate the ground a foot or more, where it is dry, and thus have less earth to dig from the sides. I recommend that plan, when there is no danger of water standing in the excavations. Clinton, v. Y. T. B. MINER.

I began to feed cut hay and corn meal, and found the horses would do more work and last longer, and be in better condition than when kept on dry feed. Cracked corr and oats make a very good feed for noon, when in a hurry. I would feed carrots all winter in small quantities, especially to young horses and breeding mares. This keeps them in a healthy condition. Team horses may be fed on them once each day to advantage. I am not able to state the amount each horse should be fed; this depends on the size and age of the animal. I would advise all owners to keep their horses, especially those they use, in condition; it costs less in the end. Colts ought not to have much grain, unless very thin in flesh; they are often injured by graining. A few ground oats, with cut hay or straw wet and mixed, and half a pint of ashes added once in two or three weeks, is all colts need beside bay. The ashes keep the bowels open, and, it is said, free from worms. If living in Maine or Vermont, where hay and outs are cheap, I would have the oats ground, and cut a portion of my hay and straw to mix with what grain I feed, and consider myself wellpaid for the feed, and consider myself wellpuid for the time and trouble.—American Agriculturist.
