MY BOYISH LOVE.

A Beautiful Little Love Sketch.

In the village of Ann Sable, county Clinton, New York, in the year 1858, a new personage was introduced into our house .-We lived in a square, bright-looking farm house, having large windows with large glasses. This personage was a young woman seamstress and assistant housewife. She was a very pretty woman with large gray eyes, and a nose the tiniest bit turned. Her gown was plain, but tastoful: and her movements graceful and easy. She made exquis-ite doughnuts, and succeeded somehow with-out filling the house with that heavy grease smell. Although a small boy at that time, I was precocious and fanciful. I had my love at school, a dark eyed, melancholy and sentied to onthe together, me geologizers that we were.

Once her eye met mine. I was sorrowful I know, but I must no longer sought her face. I no longer joined in her seatimental journey. I hurried away to school no more. I staid my full hour at bave looked inquiringly and kindly upon her, for she extended her hand, which I rejected, noon, and in the evening I sped very fleetly home. The new woman had confused my ideas. I was a sturdy and ruddy cheeked fellow, very talkative and lively. And the subdued but powerful character of Annie, the seamstress, had changed and interested me. She must have noticed an admiration very strong and unusual for one of my age. yet she apparently received it as a matter of Course.

Her face would blaze sometimes, but not with such rays; the light was more silvery. She had taught school and she told me about troublsome school committees; struggles against friendlessness; conflicts with curly headed boys, and about her pet girls, bright eyed and keen-tongued little lawns. She even teld me of her aspirations, of her ardent desire for improvement. This confidence from an elegant woman-for she was neat and had an air of a great lady, raised me in my estimation, and made me esteem very much the person who so delicately flattered my boy manliness. She used to tell us stories-myself, brother and sister. We called our evening gatherings soirces, Her tones were serious and nicely modulated, and her arm was oftentimes softly and caressingly thrown upon my neck. At school I used to confuse sadly my exercises. "Annie" was often written in my rough drafts of composition, my algebra equations would rest unfinished while I was gazing into the large and thoughtful eyes prefigured in space. At recess time I would go out to think about her. I would review what she had said, recall her accent and genture, and wonder if she was as fond of me as I was of her. Flowers and pieces of quartz and mica and garnet, petrifications and fossils, would find their way to her bureau.

She went up a very steep mountain once with me and Nep, my dog, in order to look upon the herds of sheep. We carried a bag of salt with us; such a bright day; everything seem so good natured, the grass laughed in the sunshine, the air had a jocund notion, and the leaves of the oak and the tassels of the green pines rustled with such a lively here. Can't you be my brother! Oh, I need joy. We sat down on the green grass, and I, giving the shepherd's cry, which I uttered to perfection, in a little while gatheaed the mild one so much ?" eyed sheep. We gave them salt and petted them. Annie looked so happy, her eyes so bright-and she had a gentle slyness of look and that demure smile which means more than it says.
