The Rev. Channing said: "I wish," said Mr. C. "the hall had been crowded both by white and colored. He described the Thanksgiving services at the contraband camp, which he attended in company with Mrs. Stowe, and which was a most impressive thanksgiving. In a few years we shall live together, black and white; without ny distinction of color.

These people have a right to our protection. They trusted the President's proclamation, and they know of our promises that they hall be free. Their patience and generosiwas commendable, and the speaker gave several instances where the slaves of loyal nasters when told that they were not yet ree, replied that they would trust "Massa In, and wait a few years longer."

He alluded to the prejudices against the olored race, which were not at all creditable to the people holding them. This prejudice was not well founded; when the white man goes to Africa, in a few weeks all the prejudice disappears, and in other countries the same effect takes place. It was on this prendice that this unboly rebellion is based -The southerners contend there is a national livision between the white and black races, children to live among the blacks; be nursed by a colored nurse, and in every way they are trusted without any distinction, except that they must own them.
