In this age of concentrated fertilizers, when the laboratory of the chemist is sending forth numerous and highly energetic compounds, -phosphates, super-phosphates, cancorine and poudrette, to supersede the old-fashioned manures, it may appear to those who so warmly advocate "Scientific Agriculture," as a work of supererogation to call the atten tion of the farmer to those materials which the professed scientist considers of little or no value, compared with the aforementioned articles. All animal substances form very active manures. There is, indeed, no part of an animal which may not be made to act as an efficient fertilizer. Horn is even more valuable than bone, containing a larger por-tion of decomposable matter, and acting with greater energy and with a more immediate effect both upon the soil and crop. Its speedy decomposition is effected in nitrogen, hy-droeen, carbonic acid, phosphorus and sulphate of lime, and it then enters into combi nation with them, producing substances all of which are more or less advantageous to vegetation. The shavings and trimmings of horn, obtained from the turners' and combmakers' shops, are the most frequently used for purposes of agristic enrichment. The hoofs of black cattle, which may generally be obtained in almost any quality of the butchers, will, if cut into small pieces, be found to appear to the control of the country of the butchers. found to produce a most excellent effect upon any soil to which they may be applied. The refuse of the shambles, consisting of blood, bair and the various kinds of filth there accumulated, makes an excellent manure .-But, like fish, when applied in a fresh state, it soon exhausts its energy, and unless applied in conjunction with some substance of a more durable nature, the land manured with it will in a short become less productive than before. Probably the most judicious use that can be made of this and all similar substances, is to mix them in compost with substances of slower action. Used in this way, they will be found of great value. The hair and wool of animals are composed of nearly, if not precisely the same constituents as horn, but they are not so easily decomposed, and of course do not act so speedily posed, and of course do not act so speedily who can say that they are not frequently followed by those "direful diseases" way, they will be found of great value. The | These symptoms, if allowed to go on which this fore being applied.

In England and on the Continent, not only hoofs, horus, hair, and bristles are collected for manurial purposes, and often sold at a high price, but rags, refuse feathers, and even old hats are gathered up and thrown into the markets, where they command a ready sale and a remunerating price. These materials are prepared by first throwing them into trenches purposely prepared and sprinkled with caustic lime, and left to decompose. The matter resulting from the decomposition is subsequently mixed with the soil as an ameliorant, or applied to crops in the same manner as other putrescent manures. Shoes, old leather, and the small chips from the vigorate the system, which HELMBOLD'S EX-shoe manufactory, though with difficulty de-composed without the assistance of some composed without the assistance of some powerful and energetic solvent, are yet capable of furnishing a most efficient and valua-ble manure. When thrown into a trench or compact heap, and mixed with quick lime they speedily enter into a state of incipient decomposition, and are transformed into a mucilaginous state, and in time become good Another article much used in the vicinity of large cities is the scum taken from the kettles of sugar boilers, and the rich resthe kettles of sugar boilers, and the rich residum of the manufactures of this article, which is composed of blood, mucilage and lime, and which is found, on analysis, to contain many of those principles which growing vegetables the most rendily assimilate by the action of their internal mechanism for their own development and support. There their own development and support. There are also many vegetable substances that are gapable of being made to contribute largely to the fertility and productiveness of the farm. The spurious vegetation which so profusely springs up and flourishes with so much vigor in our ill-managed pasture grounds, and along the margin of our highways, is all available for manurial purposes, and capable, by a very simple process of being made to contribute essentially to the fer-tility of cultivated lands. Even the mosses, and the various species of juncus, contain the essential elements of a healthy fertility. They may be gathered at those seasons when their vitality is most vigorous, and, if thrown into heaps, with a little quick lime, gypsum, wood ashes, and such other materials as pro mote decomposition, they will soon be resolved into a substance eminently well cal-culated to supply any deficiency of humus in the soil, and to hasten the development of cultivated crops .- Portland Argus.

In a report of the Fruit Committee of the Massachusetts State Board of Agriculture, headed by M. P. Wilder, we have the following excellent remarks on the salutary influences of thorough draining, the proper preences of thorough draining, the proper pre-paration of the soil, and the necessity of judicious and careful cultivation to insure the healthful developement and longevity of fruit trees. 'In the preparation of the site for an orchard, thorough draining of the soil is uniformly advantageous. This is now admitted by all good cultivators to be an indispensable condition to perfect success in the production of one trees and handsome fruit. Wherever there is an excess of water in the soil, at any season of the year, the health of the trees sooner or later, will be impaired and its life shortened. Most of the diseases which have affected fruit trees in our region, such as the spotting in our folinge, decomposition of the bark, and the blasting and the cracking of the fruit, are attributable to uncongenial and imperfectly drained soils. In fact, there are how Long Standing. very few locations where draining is not beneficial. In undrained soils water accumulates first at the extremities of the lower roots. When, therefore, autumn approaches, evaporation growing less and less, and the tem perature of the earth being reduced, the roots become chilled and the functions of the tree arrested, just at the time when in our cli-mate they are most required for bringing our fruits to perfect maturity. All lands intended for orchards should not only be well drained, but the land should be thoroughly plowed deeply if not subsoiled. The advantage resulting from such properly prepared soils is now so universally acknowledged as to need no further discussion in this report. "An orchard should always be kept free from grass, grain, and weeds. No other product should be grown upon the soil except vegactables, and these only while the trees vegactables, and these only while the trees from young and occupy but a small portion of the land. And when the trees attain a bearing condition, the cultivation of the soil cloude not extend to the depth of more than three inches, never disturbing the root with ed as of any great benefit, as the roots of ma-ture trees extend far beyond the outlines of these circles.

"The influence of the soil on certain kinds of fruit is remarkable. Some succeed on any tolerable good lands; some best on light, will not permit of the specification of the particular soil and location for each variety, and only to allude very briefly to these perticulars in the entry of the specification of the particular soil and location for each variety, and only to allude very briefly to these perticulars in the entry of the specification of the particular soil and location for each variety, and only to allude very briefly to these perticulars in the entry of the specification of the particular soil and location for each variety, and only to allude very briefly to these perticulars in the entry of their own and other articles on the reputation attained by Helmhold's Genuine Extract Buchu; ticulars in the catalogue herewith presented It is hoped, however, that in coming time this information may be obtained and diffused through the agency of this Board in regard to all the fruits that may be adapted to the soils of our commonwealth,"
