northern end of Hyde's cut.
On Friday night, the Eric Express and Elmira Express, both going north, were detained at Parkton by the running off of a freight engine, caused by the switch being left open.

As soon as the track was cleared, both trains proceeded on their journey, the Elmira Express going ahead. All went well until the noint above mentioned was reached, when the foremost train came in violent collision with the York Local Freight, which had left this place a short time previous. As those in charge of either train, from some fatal and countable misunderstanding, had no idea that the track was not clear, both trains wor running at their usual rate of speed, at least. The result of the collision was, of course, a terrific wreck, particularly of the passenger train, which had the greatest momentum. The lad in charge of the sleeping car was immediately sent back with a signal, and the Eric Express was thus prevented from running into the wreck.

The wrecked passenger train was drawn by locomotive No. 13, and was composed of an express car, baggage car, and eight passenger cars. The two former cars were com-pletely demolished, and crushed into an undistinguishable mass. The conductor, two distinguishable mass. The conductor, the express messengers, and the baggage master, Thomas Graybill, of Baltimore, who was killed, were in the baggage car at the time of the accident. How the three escaped with their lives is a miracle to themselves and to us. The conductor was somewhat cut about the head, and was able to go to his home, in Baltimore; but the expressmen were more seriously lunt, and were brought to King's hotel, in this borough. The next car, mostly filled with soldiers, was torribly smashed, and the one end thrown up on the front ears to the height of at least 25 feet. In this car, one man was killed, and a large number wounded. The other cars, of course, and letter, and only those near the ends of some of them were in any danger. Both engineers and firemen escaped by jumping. The freight engine was the No. 28, one of Winan's cumelbacks." Several boxes with corpses from the army, on the front platforms, &c, were broken open, and one of the bodies terribly mutilated.

As soon as all the dead and wounded, to-gether with the mail and other valuables. were removed from the wreck, prearations were inimediately made to clear the track. Mr. Goodwin, the able and efficient chief engineer of the road, was promptly on the ground, and remained until every particle of the wreek was removed from the track, which was shortly after nightfall. About dusk, both engines and tenders, locked together as in the collision, were brought to the depot in this borough. They had not run off the

The officers and employees of the railroad company at this place did all in their power to relieve the wounded, and make due disposition of the dead.

The face has nothing of the dwarf about it, but my observation that she looked as big as an ordinary child of her age was not approved by the secretary, who assured me that the weight was something very far below the average, and, lifting up the expensive lace frock, showed me her little feet in red morocco shoes, which are not larger than those of a moderate-sized doll. My inquiry whether the child was expected to grow up adwarf met with the cautious answer that there was 'no precedent.' This is, I believe, true.
