Practical.

I know thy heart remembers me.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its pain and pleasure.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its joy and sorrow.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its hope and despair.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its love and hate.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its faith and doubt.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its strength and weakness.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its glory and shame.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its triumph and defeat.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its honor and dishonor.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its life and death.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its eternity.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its nothingness.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its beingness.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its truth and falsehood.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its beauty and ugliness.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its goodness and evilness.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its holiness and sinfulness.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its righteousness and unrighteousness.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its justice and injustice.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its mercy and unmercifulness.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its kindness and unkindness.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its gentleness and ungentleness.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its meekness and unmeekness.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its patience and impatience.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its kindness and unkindness.

I know thy heart remembers me in all its patience and impatience.

ter-in-law. The anguish in the gentle woman's eyes softened her a little, and she hesitated a moment.

"Do not worry and look so miserable, Annie. Am I going to commit a crime, that you should be so distressed?"

"I do not know, but I feel as if I should like to see you in a more cheerful mood."

"I will try, but I feel as if I should like to see you in a more cheerful mood."

MADAME SCANDAL.

A long time ago, in the western part of England, there lived an aged couple whose time had passed away, since early youth, in the every day round of farm life, and who had never been known to quarrel.

"I have never seen a more beautiful woman than Helen," said Mr. Tibbly.

"I have never seen a more beautiful woman than Helen," said Mr. Tibbly.
