Feeding Grain to Stock Profitably.

There is always a class of farmers, who still question whether it will pay to feed animals the grain which they themselves raise. They have not satisfied themselves by their own experience in making beef, mutton, or pork. If grain be properly fed to animals of a good breed, there is no doubt about its being usually a paying operation; but fed out unground and irregularly, if the animals are ever so good, it seldom pays. There is a difference, also, in the manner of computing the gains which usually accrue from the grain consumed by animals. A good portion of the profits of converting grain into meat of any kind, cannot be realized by the sale of the meat; cannot be realized by the sale of the meat for many times an animal will not sell for as much money as the grain and hay it has consumed white fattening. In view of this fact alone, feeding grain appears to be a poor practice. Nevertheless, multitudes of the best farmers of our country sell but little grain, others sell none at all, while many purchase much more than they raise on their own land, and feed it all to stock of some kind, and yet derive a paying profit from the basis. yet derive a paying profit from the business. Others attempt it and fail because they feed poor stock, not well purchased nor selected, or because they do not feed nor selected, or because they do not feed with proper system, nor preserve with sufficient care the solid and liquid manure of the fattening animals. In fact, it is the manure alone that the greater part of the profit of fattening beef, sheep and swine consists, to most of the farmers of the United States, and the rest of the civilized world. The more manure, and the better saved the greater the profi-and the better saved, the greater the profit, even in Illinois. The way to begin is, to get good animals and to put them in fair order on grass. Meat can be made on grass in warm weather more economically than on any other feed. Those persons who attempt to make beef of poor cows and bullocks, or mutton of poor sheep, by feeding hay and grain without commen-eng on grass, will never make out well.

When one intends to prepare a lot of bullocks or sheep for marketing in the spring, he should commence feeding a spring, he should commence feeding a small quantity of grain per head as soon as grass begins to full, for in passing from grass to hay, they should not be allowed to lose any of the flesh or fat that has accumulated during the grazing season. If by irregularity of feeding, or by exposure to storms, or by short allowances of feed, an animal is required to use up a pound of fat to maintain the heat and to supply the natural wastes of the body, it will take several days to replace the small amount that has been lost by this bad management. Every animal should be fed enough to keep it improvingsa little every day. Some bullocks require more meal than others, and the same is true of sheep. A dry cow, or a bullock three or four years old, designed for beef next May or June, should receive not less than two quarts of Indian corn meal, or its equivalent in some other grain, during the months of December and January. After this, the quantity may be increased at plea are, and should always be increased from month to month, according to the feeding capacity of the animal, the calculation being to finish off the fattening with ten or twenty days grazing, without reducing the quantity of grain.— In addition to this amount of meal, they should have a foldering of hay, once daily, and one of cornstalks, and a few hours daily in a yard with access to good straw. If a farmer has a power cutter, it is far more economical to chaff the hay, is far more economical to cann the nay straw and cornstalks, wet it, and mingle the meal with it. Feed prepared in this manner, is better for sheep as well as neat cattle and horses. The use of oil-meal for beef animals must be regulated on the same principles, as a substitute for part of the meal. Wethers and dry ewes should receive nearly or quite one pound of Indian corn or corn meal per head daily, or what is better, half a pound of oil meal and half a pound of corn or of barley meal mixed. It is folly to attempt to make meat in cold weather, without complete protection from cold and wet,—American Agriculturist.

THE BEST HORSE STABLE.

The best for us and for our horses, is the best we can afford. If one can do no better by his horses than to give them an better by his horses than to give them an open shed, then of course the open shed is the best stable his horse can have. So if we can not all afford the very best, yet if we know what this is we shall come nearer to it, with what means we have. It is probable that a horse will take more comfort and do better in a box stall, or "loose box" 10 feet square, (10 by 8 will do very well,) than in any other stall. The floor of such a stall, if made of 3 by 4 joists set edgeways, \(\frac{1}{2}\) of an inch apart. The floor of such a stall, if made of 3 by 4 joists set edgeways, $\frac{1}{2}$ of an inch apart, and level, over a grouted and cemented floor, inclining toward a drain to carry off the urin, will always be dry, and if covered with a foot of straw will be very soft and comfortable. The droppings may easily be removed with a fork.—There should be abundant light, free ventilation, and a feeding box and manger. The manger ought to extend from the floor about 3 feet high, having tight sides, the top protected by an iron rail, or one of wood bound with iron, being two feet from the head of the stall; the two feet from the head of the stall; the front side should be set in 6 inches at the bottom, that is, be 18 inches from the head of the stall. Inside the manger a tight false bottom, 1 foot from the floor, should be placed. This box is to hold dry fodder, and there should be an iron folfodder, and there should be an iron follower (to lie on the hay) 3 feet long and 14 inches wide, made of two rods of halfinch iron, the one toward the front turned at each end, so as to form with the other a parallelogram, of the length and width named. There should be two cross-pieces welded in a foot apart, and the ends should extend towards the rear six inches, and each form a hook, by which the follower may be hung on the back of the manger box. There should Between this and one side of the stall should be set a box for grain and cut feed, capable of holding about a bushel. This should be at the same level with the top of the manger, and may well be of the same width, and about 1 foot in length, and 1 foot deep, the front and rear sides sloping toward the centre a little. To prevent the horse throwing his feed out, a single rod of iron may be hinged to the back of the feed box to fall across it and rest in a slot in the front. The manger and feed box should be made of 2-inch oak stuff and very strong. There may be, also, an arrangement for feeding without entering the stall, and for a breeding mare it is quite an advantage to have an outside door open into asmall yard, where in confortable most the real of the stall mare it is quite an advantage to have an outside door open into a small yard, where in comfortable weather she can move about and take an airing at pleasure.—

THE MOST PROLIFIC COW ON RECORD.

We have not, so far as we remember, the personal asquaintance of Mr. Henry Neff, of West Burre, Huntingdon Co., Pa., who is a way of the following varies.

Neff, of West Burre, Huntingdon Co., Pa., who is responsible for the following very remarkable statement:

"A short time since I read in the N. Y. Times an account of a very prolific cow in England, having four calves at one time, which all died soon after. Porter Township, Huntingdon Co., Pa., can beat that "all hollow." When I was a boy, about thirty years since, my father had a cow that had righteen (18) calves at seven 17) births. The first time she had one, the next time three, the next time four; three times succeeding this she had three each time, and the last time she had two. They all lived and grew up fine and large, with the overeach time, and the last time she had two. They all lived and grew up fine and large, with the exception of one, which was one of the four. When the cow was found in the field with four calves, one was dead, although it was as large as the living ones, and control as norfect in every restrict and seemed as perfect in every respect. I can give any amount of testimony to prove the correctness of the above, if any
