It is very seldom that one finds a privy in the country which is not a nuisance. Those who are careful and neat about most matters, generally utterly neglect this necessary appendage to their premises. It is well known that the poudrette which is made and sold in such large quantities is only night soil, deodorized by mixing it with the dredgings of a canal and drying it. It is commonly supby mixing it with the dredgings of a canal and drying it. It is commonly supposed that some particular kind of earth is necessary, and in the absence of that, none at all is used. Any kind of earth, well dried, and all the better if sifted, will answer to mix with the night soil.—The Rev. H. Moule, of England, states, that he finds that the earth after being used once and then thoroughly dried, is equally as efficacious as at first, and that he was using the same earth for the fifth time, the resulting compound being so perfectly odorless, that a person unacquainted with its composition would not it suspect what was. Aside from considerations of comfort and health, this plan is worth adopting for the value of the result-worth adopting for the value of the result-ing manure. He says:

"A farmer and several laborers to whom I mentioned the following simple plan at once entered into it; the present vault is to be discontinued, and in the place of it there is to be under the seat a place of it there is to be under the seat a small enclosure of brick or stone, six or nine inches deep. To preserve the full value of the manure for the garden, the enclosure should be paved, or have a flat stone for its bottom. It would, of course, be closed with a door. On one side would be a small rough shed, capable of covering and keeping dry a cart-load of earth for the purpope of mixing, and on the other side a similar shed into which the soil so mixed would day by day be thrown other side a similar shed into which the soil so mixed would day by day be thrown for the purpose of drying. When dry, this would be used again, and the uses of the two sheds be reversed. By thus repeatedly using it, and shifting it backwards and forwards from one shed to the other, one load of earth will be found sufficient for five persons, certainly for six months, and, I believe, for twelve.—This is the simplest, but by no means the least offensive mode of applying this remarkable agent."

WILLOW HEDGES

The vexed question of living Willow fences, is thus treated by our correspondent G. G. Greene, of Hudson:

I have heard much complaint from persons who have undertaken to make hedges of willow, that they were unable to make them grow, or that they died out in places after having started. The soil at times may have been too dry and poor, or they were not properly put out or carat times may have been too dry and poor, or they were not properly put out or cared for: the following plan which I have followed with very great success, will, I think, ensure a hedge in almost any soil, and at almost any season. In cutting or trimming up old willow trees, I take the limbs varying from two to six inches in diameter, cut them up in pieces as long as they will cut tolerably strait, say four, six or ten feet long. I plow a furrow if practicable, just where I desire the fence, or dig a shallow trench, placing these pieces in the twench in a straight continuous line, and cover them up with these pieces in the trench in a straight continuous line, and cover them up with earth; if the soil is wet, I leave the tops exposed, if dry, I cover, say an inch in depth: the sprouts spring up very rapidly, much thicker than they can be grown in any other way, and they will make as much growth in one season as they will in two years by the ordinary mode of planting. They make a better hedge than can be grown of willow in any other way, for these reasons:

They are sure to grow; the sprouts come up so thick as to admit of being trimmed the first season, and grow more rapidly the first season, and grow more rapidly than in any other way; their roots are one continuous mass and the fence can not be pulled up or blown down; they do not die out in places; they can be grown on any kindof soil; they will make a fence cheaply and effectively, which can not be said of half the willow hedges I have seen.

In the fall a furrow should be turned up against them, and at the proper season they may be trimmed to suit the owner's

Along water courses, where the soil is in danger of washing away, they answer an excellent purpose planted in this way, as their roots penetrate the soil rapidly and soon link it together in a firm mass.

THE CROPS IN VIRGINIA.—The farmers of this section are making large progress with their harvests, and have been favorwith their harvests, and have been favored with admirable weather. A gentleman who is cultivating a large farm on the James, five miles below, informed us on the 21st instant, that the shortness of the crop of wheat would in some degree be atoned for by the excellence of the staple, producing on the whole about two-thirds yield. The quality of the wheat he describes as admirable, and will insure, he thinks, a weight of sixty-four pounds he thinks, a weight of sixty-four pounds to the bushel. The crop of oats is magnificant, and corn is doing well.—Richmond White

PASTURAGE OF Cows.—It is well known that Cheshire, England, is a great dairy county. This lies not far from Liverpool. Chester, the market town, is, perhaps, a dozen or fifteen miles from the city. Most of the land has been underdrained and tondraged with great and the conditions of the land has been underdrained and tondraged with great land. drained and top-dressed with ground bones, and such land will carry one cow to the acre. Where it has not been top-dressed and drained a cow will require two acres. They use 1,200 to 1,500 weight of bones to the acre about once in seven years. How many acres does it take to years. How many acres does it take to keep a cow in this country? Would it not pay to bring up our pastures?—Mass

To Preserve Eggs.—The best method I know of to preserve eggs, says a correspondent of an exchange, is to fill the pores of the shell with fresh clean lard, so as to exclude all air. It is my opinion that this simple and easy method is preferable to any in use. Some put them in limewater, some lay them down in salt, some put them in sawdust. But the lime cooks them so they have a dried appearance; salt has a similar effect—while eggs saturated with lard, as far as my experience goes, open fresh and nice. To PRESERVE Eggs.—The best method

A BEAUTIFUL IDEA.—That was a beautiful idea in the mind of a little girl, who on beholding a rosebush, where, on the topmost stem, the oldest rose was fading, whilst below and around it three beautiful crimson buds were just unfolding their charms, at once artlessly expressed to her brother, "See, Willie, these little buds have just awakend in time to kiss their mother before she dies!"

ONIONS AND POULTRY.-Scarely too much can be said in praise of onions for fowls. They seem to be a preventive and remedy for various diseases to which do-mestic fowls are liable. For gapes and inflamation of the throat, eyes and head, onions are almost a specific. They should be finely chopped. A small addition of cornmeal is an improvement.—Genesee Farmer.

CURING HENS OF SITTING .- A writer In the New England Farmer says that he cured his hens from sitting by shutting them up in a tub having an inch or two of water on the bottom. He keeps them there during the day and puts them on the roost at night. If not cured the first day he treats them to the "water cure" another day, when they will be glad to stand on their feet.
