Agricultural. [From American Agriculturist. PRESERVATION OF VEGETABLES IN WINTER.

BY PETER HENDERSON, SOUTH BERGEN; N. J.

The following timely article is a chapter from Mr. Henderson's forthcoming ter from Mr. Henderson's forthcoming work on Gardening:

"Our manner of preserving vegetable roots in winter is, I think, peculiar to this district, and is very simple and safe. After taking up such crops as beets, carrots, horse-radish, parsnips, turnips, potatoes, etc., in fall, they are put in temporary oblong heaps, on the surface of the ground on which they have been growing, and covered up with 5 or 6 inches of soil, which will keep off such slight frosts soil, which will keep off such slight frosts as are likely to occur until time can be spared to put them in permanent winter quarters, this is done in this section usually during the first part of December, in the following manner: A piece of ground is chosen as dry as possible; if not naturally dry, provision must be made to carry off the water, lower than the bottom of the pit. The pit is dug out from three to four feet dcep, about six feet wide, and of four feet deep, about six feet wide, and of the length required; the roots are then packed in sections of about two feet wide across the pit, and only to the height of the ground level. Between the sections, a space of half a foot is left, which is filled up with the soil level to the top; this leaves the pit filled up two feet wide in roots, and half a foot of soil, and so on until the whole is finished. The advantage of this plan is, that it is merely a series of small pits, holding from three to five bar-rels of roots, which can be broken out for market without exposing the next section, as it is closed off by the six inches of soil between. Also that we find that roots of all kinds keep safer when in small bulk, than when large numbers are thrown into one pit together. In covering, the top is rounded so as to throw off the water, with a layer of from 18 inches to 2 feet of soil. This way of preserving roots, with perhaps the exception of po-tatoes, is much preferable to keeping them in a cellar or root house, as they not only keep fresher, retaining more of their natural flavor and color, but far fewer of them are lost by decay than when exposed to the air and varying temperature of a cellar. Unmatured heads of cauliflower or broccoli, however, are best matured in a light cellar or cold frame, by being planted close together; in this way good heads may be had to January.— Cabbages are preserved very simply; they are left out as late as they can be pulled up by the roots, in this section about the end of November, they are then pulled up and turned upside down—the roots up, the heads packed close together, in beds six feet wide, with six feet alleys between, care being taken to have the ground levelled where the cabbages are placed, so that they pack nicely. They are left in this way for two or three weeks, or as long as the ground can be dug between the alleys, the soil from which is thrown in on the beds of cabbage, so that when finished they have a covering of four or six inches of soil. This is not enough to cover the root however, which is left partly exposed, but this is in no way injurious. Some prefer to cover them up at once by plowing a furrow, shoveling it out wide enough to receive the heads of the cabbages, then turning the soil in on the heads, and so continuing until beds of six or eight feet are thus formed.— This plan is rather more expeditious than the former, but it has the disadvantage the former, but it has the disalyantage of compelling them to be covered up at once by soil, while the other plan delays it two or three weeks later, and it is of the utmost importance in preserving vegetables that the operation (particularly the final covering) be delayed as late in the season as frost will permit. Generally more is lost by beginning too soon than delaying too late. Onjons, we find are best preserved in a barn or stable loft, in layers of from 8 to 10 inches deep, covin layers of from 8 to 10 inches deep, cov ered up with about a foot of hay or straw on the approach of severe frosts. The great point to be attained is a low tem-perature and a dry atmosphere; they will bear 20 degrees of frost without injury, provided they are not moved while fro-zen, but they will not stand a reduction without injury.

zen, but they will not stand a reduction of temperature much lower than this

Our rural friends are very hospitable, when we visit them they treat us during the day with the greatest kindness, but they are often cruel to us at night, and most always consign us to a feather bed, in the smothering depressions of which we pass a sleepless night. That a feather we pass a steepless fight. That treather bed is a fit thing to sleep upon, is an idea rapidly disappearing, we are happy to say; yet in many communities feathers still prevail, and they are looked upon as silk lresses are, in some measure an index of the wealth, or competence of the owner. It is quite time that all this was changed, and comfort and health consulted, rather than show. We say comfort,—for no one after having slept for a few weeks on a hard bed, would willingly return to feathers. Curled hair makes the very best mattresses, but is expensive; the next best thing is corn husks, a cheap materi-al, and accessible to all. The inner husks, or shucks, as they are called in some pla-ces, allowed to curl up a little, are often used without any preparation. A softer bed is made by slitting the husks in strips, half an inch or so in width; a fork may half an inch or so in width; a fork may be used to faciliate stripping. The best husk bed we ever saw was made from the husks of green corn, shredded by drawing through a flax hatchel. Husk-beds should be opened about once in six months the husks shaken out from the fine particles and dust, be sprinkled, and allowed to lay in the sun for a while. Treated in this way the husks will be almost as good this way the husks will be almost as good. this way the husks will be almost as good as new. We give this timely hint, in or der that at husking time, those who would enjoy the luxury of a husk bed may take measures to secure the necessary material.

TRIPE—A GOOD FOOD—PREPARATION.
—Tripe is a wholesome, nutritious food, and would be more generally used but for an unwarrantable prejudice, and the sup-posed trouble of preparing it. It is ob-tained from the larger stomachs of all ruminating animals, but usually form beef cattle. Two subscribers to the Agricutturist, furnish simple directions as follows: H. B. Cartwright (residence not given) says: "Scald the stomach sufficiently, to loosen the inside coating, in water about the same temperature as for ter about the same temperature as for scalding hogs. Hang upon a hook, and with a knife scrape off the inside coating, which will be easily removed if rightly scalded. Then cut in five of six pieces, boil for an hour, and scrape again until perfectly clean. After this boil until tender, when it is ready to use in any way."

... Sarah Young, Washington County, O., writes: "Take the stomach or paunch while still warm after killing, and wash thoroughly in three or four waters to remove all disagreeable order and taste. Cut in convenient pieces to handle, and taking a piece as a time on a fork, scald it in hot water, lay it on a board and scrape in hot water, lay it on a board and scrape off the inner coating, which is easily done if scalded just enough." It is then to be well washed and cooked as may be desired. Builting will make it tender. well washed and cooked as may be desired. Bolling will make it tender. It may then be pickled in vinegar, or kept in salt and water, changed daily. It is good cooked like souse, or broiled like stake, buttered and peppered well. It is also good dipped in batter and fried.

Celery is best preserved out of doors in trenches a foot wide, and as deep as the plants are tall. The celery is packed closely in the trench in an upright position, and as cold weather comes on, the tops are to be gradually covered with sraw, leaves, or other protection, adding to the covering as the weather becomes colder, until it amounts to about a foot in thickness. To be more readily accessible, a portion may be put in a box in the cellar, and packed in moist sand to keep from wilting. This will not do if the cellar be
