Buffalo Hunting.

Buffalo hunting is not at all sport without peril. The hunter frequently risks his life, and numerous have been the fatal accidents which have occurred.

The bulls, when wounded, cannot be approached, even on horseback, without considerable risk, while a dismounted hunter is equally exposed to the same danger.

The buffalo runs with a gait apparently heavy and lumbering—first bearing to one side, then to the other, like a ship's sea; but when he is pursued, he can start and dash forward with a rapidity for a man on foot; and the swiftest runner, unless favored by a tree or some other object, will surely overtake and slay him.

Instances of the kind are far from being rare, and, while the animal is being hunted, such occurrences would be fearfully common.

I was once travelling with Ben's train on Fort Independence, and the train was within ten paces of me. I raised my rifle, aimed at his forehead, and fired. I saw that I had hit him; but, to my dismay, he did not fall. He only continued to charge forward more furiously than ever. To reload was impossible. My pistols had gone off with my horse and were useless. It was impossible; the bull was between me and a sudden lunge arose within me—a plan of escape presented itself, so feasible and possible, that I leaped in my perch as if by magic.

The first step was to take possession of the rope. This was not such an easy matter. The rope was fastened around the trunk by a firm knot—the other lay far out upon the prairie, where it had been fastened to the trunk. I crawled to it by the bull himself, which in crossing had noticed, and now had again pawed it with his hoofs.

All at once a bright idea flashed upon me—a sudden lunge arose within me—a plan of escape presented itself, so feasible and possible, that I leaped in my perch as if by magic.

General.

A PUNGENT CONSIDERATION of the Various Trades and Callings. BY PRIVATE MILES O'BELLY.

Of all the trades that men may call unpleasant and offensive, the most so is that of a Tailor.

For he is ever peevish; His leaders lead to nothing high; His columns are untable; And though he pretends to love his pl, He does not suit his table.

The Carpenter—his course is plain; His bit is always near him; He acquiesces every hour of gain; He chisels, and he never joor him; He never pretends to love his pl, He does not suit his table.

The Publican—his course is plain; His bit is always near him; He acquiesces every hour of gain; He chisels, and he never joor him; He never pretends to love his pl, He does not suit his table.

St. Crispin's son—the man of shoes, Has all things at control; He wears wealthily in his views, He never neglects his sole; His is indeed a healing trade; And when we come to casting The total profits he has made, We find his ends are lasting.

The Tailor, too, gives fits to all, He gets a goodly share from his; His exchanges, however small; Are most delicious tasting; His goods are heated—happy fit; He never pretends to love his pl, He does not suit his table.

The Farmer reaps a fortune plump, Though harrowed far from woe; His spade forever proves a tramp, He has no time to show; His book is his "Deo in hoc, sir; He never pretends to love his pl, He does not suit his table.

The Soldier on his giddy mast— Comparatively naught; He has a bulwark round his mast; He never pretends to love his pl, He does not suit his table.

Even should he be full of life, His mainstay still is o'er him, A gallant and top-gallant crew, Of course expires before him.

The sturdy Irish Laborer picks— He does not care for his; He deals with none but regular bricks, And so he pockets money; One friend sticks to him (mortar) 'tis; He never pretends to love his pl, He does not suit his table.

The Printer, though his case be hard, Yet sticks not on his nap; 'Tis his to canonize the bard, And trim a Roman cap; He never pretends to love his pl, He does not suit his table.
