1. The farmer ought to rise early, to see that others do so, and that both his example be follwed, and his orders obeyed.

2. The whole farm should be regularly inspected, and not only every field examinated but overy beast seen at least once a ined, but every beast seen at least once day.

3. In a considerable farm, it is of the utmost consequences to have hands specially appropriated for each of the most important department of labor, for there is often a great loss of time, where persons are frequently changing their employments; and the work is not executed so well.

4. Every means should be thought of to diminish labor, or to increase its nower. diminish labor, or to increase its power. For instance, by proper arrangement five horses may do as much labor as six perform, according to the usual mode of employing them.

5. A farmer ought never to engage in a work, whether of ordinary practice, or intended improvement, except after the most careful inquiries; but when begun, he ought to proceed in it with much attention and perseverence, until he has given tion and perseverence, until he has given

Every farmer should have a book for inserting all those useful hints, which are so frequently occurring in conversation, in books, in papers, and gathered in the course of his reading, or in a practical management of his farm.—Sinclair.

BUTTER MAKING IN WINTER. - Some families are quite successful in making butter in the winter season. Mr. Scott, of Vermont, believes that it may be mad about as profitable when the cows are fed with the right kind of hay as when they run in pasture. But there are so many who think differently, who "don't have no luck in winter," that milk enough to no luck in winter," that milk enough to make many tons of butter is wasted every winter. A correspondent of the Rural American, whose wife has made butter every winter for ten years, and who has himself done all the churning in a common dash churn, seldom occupying more than ten or fifteen minutes in the opera-tion, condenses the secret of his success, so far as the management of the milk and cream is concerned; into the following

pithy sentences: pithy sentences:

Cows should be kept warm and clean, and in addition to plenty of sweet, early cut hay, mileh cows should be treated with warm slops and bran mashes, varied by roots and meal. They should have plenty of pure air and exercise, and be salted regularly once a week. The stables and cows must be well cleaned before milking, and the treatment of the cows be ruled by patience and gentleness. The milk, by patience and gentleness. The milk, whenstrained, should be brought to a scalding heat and set in a warm place, where it will not freeze. The cream should be taken off before the milk thickens, and be kept in as cool a place as it can be without freezing. Cream managed in this way will be very thick, and when put in the churn needs diluting, which should be done by adding warm milk till, when well mixed, the temperature of the gream is each that a drop applied to the cream is such that a drop applied to the forehead will feel neither cold nor warm.

FROST—TAKE CARE OF YOUR HOUSE PLANTS.—"The hoary monarch will visit us before long and his rigorous breath will prove destructive of delicate plants and unsheltered gardens. Those who take pride in choice flowers should see that they are not exposed on any clear, cold night. The best way is to transplant into pots which are to be preserved through the winter. Geraniums should be at once taken up and after they are well rooted in pots, which process will go on better with the plants exposed to the light and air they can be removed to a warm celler for the winter. Here with very little attention, they will keep nicely until spring. Fushias, the most beautiful house plants we have, can be made to blossom all win-ter by keeping them in a very even, warm temperature and giving them suf-ficient light."

often sustain great injury from being roughly shaken by those engaged in gathering the fruit. Apples and pears ripe enough to be gathered require to have the trees shaken considerably before they will fall off, and in doing this much unripe fruit will also fall, and the limbs and twigs are often injured by the process.—On low trees, dwarf nears, &c., the fruit GATHERING FRUIT,-Fruit trees very twigs are often injured by the process.—On low trees, dwarf pears, &c., the fruit can be picked very easily, and the following is a good test of the ripeness of pears, apples, &c., that are picked for eating.—Take hold of the fruit, and instead of pulling it down, lift up gently on the same, and if sufficiently ripe to be eaten it will immediately yield from the tree—if it does not come off it should not be picked or eaten.—Rural New Yorker.

CELERY.-This is best preserved out of doors in trenches a foot wide, and as deep as the plants are tall. The celery is packed closely in the trench in an upright po sition, and as cold weather comes on, the tops are to be gradually covered with strew, leaves or other protection, adding to the covering as the weather becomes colder, until it amounts to about a foot ir thickness. To be more readily accessi ble a portion may be put in a box in the cellar, and packed in moist sand to keep from wilting. This will not do if the cel-

Frost, even if very slight, injures squashes and pumpkins. Carrots are damaged seriously by a frost that freezes the ground. Beets and rutabagas will bear but little more, losing especially in sweetness. Cabbages, celery and turnips may be exposed when water will freeze one eighth of an inch thick, and not to be injured unless they are thawed out rapidly by the warm sun.

Fig. Fall plowing should not be neglected from pressure of other work, but hire an extra hand or two and keep all the teams going. This year's corn ground intended for barley and oats next spring, should be plowed as early as possible.— The stocks of corn should be set in straight rows, as far apart as possible, and the ground plowed between them, flushing after corn is husked, and stocks removed.

inconvinced inquirer." Yes, and so is the gooseberry, whortleberry, grape, cranberry, tomato, egg fruit, etc., and so are not the raspberry, blackberry, strawberry, mulberry. A berry is any fleshy fruit resulting from the ripening of a single pistil. The raspberry, etc., are collections of fruit from numerous and distinct pistils. Oranges and lemons are berries with yery thick rinds.—American Agriculturvery thick rinds.-American Agricultur-

Corn should be husked as soon as cured, and not left in the shock, subject to the attacks of vermin and birds, and to damage by rain, causing mildew. Corn houses should be of open slats and rat proof. Before corn is put in bins, soft ears should be thoroughly sorted out, and all not sound should be cured by spreading thinly on the floor of a hot dry loft.

Cows ought to be yarded at night at all seasons, but at no time is it more impor-tant than now. The nights are long, the cows need some extra feed, which is best given in racks or in the troughs, or in the proper stalls, and the vendure they crop consists largely of old leaves which are full of lnorganic or ash constituents, hence their dung is of more value than usual Keep up the flow of milk by feeding pumpkins (without the seeds), roots, soft corn, etc.
