Many persons seem to think that when they have set out trees, they have done their part, and if the trees do not flourish, the blame is laid to the nurseryman, or they conclude that their land is not suited to fruit. Besides neglect, trees have active enemies, both biped and quadruped. A good fence, with gates securely fastened, is a great protection against the larger animals, no matter whether they have er animals, no matter whether they have two or four legs. If one has trees in grounds usually approached by a curved path, they stand a poor chance when snow is on the ground. There are certain heath-ens who will strike a beel line with their ens who will strike a bee line with their sleighs and sleds from the gate to the house, and if there are any young trees in the way, so much the worse for the trees. We once suffered very severely in this way, and when remonstrance was made, all the satisfaction we got was the information that there were no roads when snow covered the ground. We know of no way of dealing efficiently with these two-legged brutes, but there are some small four-legged ones that need looking after, and whose depredations can be warded off. Mice are often troublesome in a young orchard. If clean culture has not been followed, it is not too late to remove all dead weeds and other rubbish that can harbor mice. The little fellows like to work under cover, and the remains of weeds and grass afford them fellows like to work under cover, and the remains of weeds and grass afford them convenient shelter. They have a grand time under newly fallen snow, and it is well to head them off by tramping the snow firmly around the trees. Among the various preventives of the attacks of rabbits, none are perhaps more easily applied, or more efficacious than that proposed by Doct. Warder, at one of our pomological meetings. The rabbit is rather fastidious as to its food, and has a great dislike to animal matters. Indeed it was long ago recommended to shoot a rabbit, split it open, and rub the tree with its body, as a warning to its fellows. Doct. body, as a warning to its fellows. Doct. Warder's plan is to spatter the tree with blood. Blood is readily obtained wherever slaughtering is done, and with a vessel of this and a swab made of corn husks tind to active. tied to a stick, one can bespatter a young orchard in a short time. Doct. W. states that a single application suffices for a whole winter.

HINTS ON COOKING, Etc.

EXCELLENT STOCK YEAST (which will EXCELLENT STOCK YEAST (which will keep six months, if hung up in a bang in the air.): In ½ pint water, boil for 5 minutes a handful, (about a gill,) of good hops. Strain this still boiling hot over a pint of flourinto which there has just been grated a raw potato the size of an egg. After standing until just lukewarm, stir into it a teacupful of good yeast or of dissolved leaven kept out from last baking or of "rivels" dissolved by soaking in cold water. Allow it to rise twice, stirring it down each time. This will require 2 to 3 hours. Now take flour, or better, equal parts of corn meal and flour, and with the hands rub enough to work the whole mixture. parts of corn meal and flour, and with the hands rub enough to work the whole mixture into quite dry fragments. (These are known in old fashioned cookery as "rivels.") Spread these bits, or rivels, thinly on cloths laid on trays or boards, and leave them dry—occasionally turning them over with the hands. These dry much sooner than yeast cakes, and are less apt to sour. In baking bread, use a small teacupful of the rivels to each 4 quarts of flour.

TO MAKE YEAST AT FIRST (without to MAKE YEAST AT FIRST (without stock of any kind to start with).—Take I tablespoonful of molasses—thin raw New Orleans molasses is best—I table spoonful of flour, and I tablespoonful of water. Mix and allow it to stand a day or more in a warm place, near but not on the stove, until it ferments. Then use this with the hop water flour, and rotte dissolved. above, for "Stock Yeast," and go on and make up the rivels with flour and meal as there described. You will therafter have some yeast, or rivels, to start with. This recipe will be invaluable where no yeast of any kind can be had to begin with.

GOOD HOME-MADE BREAD-(Note all the particulars). Take 4 quarts of good flour. Seald one teacupful of it with boilthe particulars). Take 4 quarts of good flour. Scald one teacupful of it with boiling water, and then mix with it a teacupful of the "rivels," or stock yeast, above described, and previously dissolve in cold water. When cool add a pint more of the flour and a little lukewarm water to make a batter or "sponge." When this is well leavened (in about 2 hours), add the rest of the flour, and 2 heaping tablespoonfuls of salt, and lukewarm water enough to form the dough. Knead thoroughly, 10 to 15 minutes, according to the strength applied, and allow it io stand about 2 hours, or until "light." Make into 4 loaves, merely rounding without kneading the dough. Put the loaves into tin pans, or straw baskets, and let them rise again about 1 hour to recover any shrinking in handling; then bake in a moderately heated oven so as not to scorch the top. To test a hot oven, throw in a little flour, and if too hot it will scorch the flour to a crisp immediately. The teacupful of scalded flour, put at first with the rivels or yeast, makes the crust both soft and tenacious To Keep Bread well where there is no cellar, wrap it in a clean towell as soon as cooled, and put it in a tin box, or in a large covered tin pan; or, better still in the top of a refrigerator if you have one . . . For Bread in Winter, proceed as above, but instead of rivels, use a teacupful of sponge from the last baking, kept covered during the intervals; and in scalding the first teacupful of flour, use water in which a pinch of hops (with 3 fingers) has first been boiled. This will make the leaven very active. make the leaven very active.

Snow in Fritters—Why?—Make a rather thick batter of flour, milk, and a little salt. Add for each pint of milk used, a teacupful of newly fallen snow, and at once drop the batter into fat previously made hot. Eat with sugar, flavored with lemon juice. [These directions have come so often, and from so many different sources, that there seems to be something in them, though one would suppose the pure snow could be no better than an equivalent of water. Probably the air carried in by the porous snow and distributed all through the cold batter by stirring, is retained sufficiently to produce lightness, as the hot fat instantly crusts over the outside. This looks plausible, and the recipe can be easily tried when the snow comes. Success will depend upon having the fat ready hot, and cooking before millions of little air bubbles can unite and escape. Snow in Fritters-Why?-Make a
