Agricultural. THE USE OF LIME IN AGRICULTURE From a very interesting Lecture, delivered by W. Wallace Fyfe, before the Students of the Royal Agricultural College, Circenchester, we make the following extract on the use of Lime in Agriculture. The hints contained in the extract accord in the main with our own views, made up from long and close observation. We commend them to the farmers of Cumberland County:

Lime absorbs moisture from the atmosphere with incredible rapidity, and a ton of quicklime, when slaked, acquires three times its original bulk, and weighs twenty-five cwt. The only advantage, however, gained by slaking lime, is its reduction to a fine powder, which enables it to be more evenly spread. But slaked lime very soon attracts carbonic acid from the atmosphere, and becomes once more carbonate of lime, the condition in which it usually exists, and whence the most abundant supplies are obtained by driving off the carbon in burning the carbonate of lime or mountain limestone in kiins, as one hundred pounds of this, when pure; contains forty-four-pounds of carbonic acid, and fifty-one pounds of lime. Lime, therefore, by the process of burning, loses the whole of its carbonic acid, and a quarter cwt. The general opinion regarding the presence of lime in the soil, is that an arable soil ought not to possess less than one per cent. of lime, and that eight tons of burnt lime per acre would impart this proportion to six inches of soil. After a heavy liming no commend them to the farmers of Cumof which a very large supply has just been received, having been purchased since the great DECLINE IN PRICES. of all kinds and qualities of CARPETS, Embracing the celebrated Crossley Brussels, the celebrated Lowell three-ply, extra super In-grains two-ply, 5-8, 3-4 and 4-4 super Twilled Ve-nition, 5-8, 3-4 and 4-1 super Plain Venition, and that eight tons of burnt lime per acre would impart this proportion to six inches of soil. After a heavy liming no farther addition will however be requisite for six or eight years. A crop at the utmost, removes only from one to two bushels per acre of lime; and the land, at this rate, gradually reverts to the condition in which more lime is required —faster—for the lime, by its own specific gravity, uniformity descends below the active soil and these upon digging a sec-HOME MADE RAG, LINEN, HEMP. &c. gravity, uniformity descends below the active soil, and there, upon digging a section, layer upon layer of each successive liming the land may have undergone will be found deposited. Lime not only enables crops of superior quality and bulk to be produced, it enhances the effect of undecomposed manure, by calling into Also a full stock of undecomposed manure, by calling into action that which may have been lying dormant. Manure, however, ought never to be laid upon the land immediately OIL CLOTHS, er to be laid upon the land immediately after 'liming, because quicklime will drive off all its ready formed ammonia. Lime destroys marsh and heath plants, such as moss, heath, bent, and sour grasses, brings up sweet herbage with natural clover, and completely renovates herbage. All fodder is found more nutritious when grown upon land sufficiently limed. The quantity of lime required varies in proportion to the drynesse of the soil, its stiffness, and the amount of vegetable matter it contains. Poor arable lands are soon worn out by repeated limof all widths and best quality. Soa Grass Mattings Cocoa Mattings Door Mans, Rugs, WINDOW SHADES! WINDOW SHADES!! etable matter it contains. Poor arable lands are soon worn out by repeated liming and cropping. To exterminate moss, sour grass, &c., the lime must be applied in a live state. Generally speaking, the more completely and immediately quicklime is incorporated with the soil, the more effectually the slaking is accomplished in connection with the soil the better. In over spreading cross Also the fullest assortment in town of son, the more enection with the soil, the better. In over spreading grass however, where there is no intention of destroying the herbage, it is better first to slake the lime in the open air, reducing it to a powdery condition and applying It in the form of a mild lime. In this state the quantity of quicklime still contained in it should, however, be sufficient to effect the necessary chemical changes in the soil; upon this its ultimate efficacy depends. Quicklime shoud never be applied to light or thin soils, sands or gravels. Magnesian limestone has an effect similar to that of the mountain limestone. It is a carbonate of magnesia, in combination with carbonate of lime, and becomes caustic in burning, but must be used more sparingly than lime destitute of magnesia, since it re-absorbs carbonic acid more slowly and remains longer caustic. Its applica-tion is more properly made to arable than to grass land, as wheat, barley and all cereals require magnesia for the perfect development both of their straw and corn. To its perhaps over-stimulating effects, in fact, may be traced the origin of the adage, "lime enriches the futhers but impoverishes the sons." Tickings, Towellings. Lime, however, does not necessarly exhaust the soil, unless applied with unsparing prodigality. The apparent exhaustion it produces is only perceptible in cases where the sole application to the land has consisted in laying on successive Table Oil Cloths, doses of lime, and where the supplies of other manure have been too scanty. It is where lime alone has been applied that abundant crops are followed by exhaustion. The presence of mild lime in the soil assists in the formation of nitrates; and the production of nitre or saltpetre is dependent upon those properties of lime whereby nitric acid is engendered from vegetable matter. That in valuable salt, nitrate of lime, is always to be found in compost heaps. "Under ordinary circumstances." says Professor Way (Royal Agricultural Society's Journal) "and with the presence of moisture, time is capable of liberating one-half the ammonia contained in a soil. In the case of ammonia locked up in the soil, lime may be the remedy at the command of the farmer, his means of rendering immediately available stores of wealth, which can otherwise only slowly be brought to use. Transplanting in the Night.—A friend, in whose powers of observation we have confidence, and who is an exact experimenter, informs us that last Spring and Summer he made the following experiments:—He transplanted ten cherry trees while in blossom, commencing at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and transplanting one each hour, until one in the morning. Those transplanted during daylight shed their blossoms, producing little or no fruit, while those planted during the darker portions maintained their condition fully. He did the same with ten dwarf pear trees after the fruit was one-third grown. Those transplanted during third grown. Those transplanted during the day, shed their fruit; those trans-planted during the night, perfected their crop, and showed no injury from having been removed. With each of these trees he removed some earth with the roots. We are well aware that when plants are accidentally frozen in green houses, it is customary to render the house dark before applying cold water to thaw them, and that when this is not observed, they are injured, while if entire darkness be secured during the operation, many of them are saved. But the experiment of our friend seems to have but little analogy to this fact, and it is entirely new to us.— Working Farmer. removed some earth with the root

C. A. Brown, of Stockbridge, Vermont, sowed the product of an accidental head of barley found in a field of wheat; the of barley found in a field of wheat; the product of four grains was 1,411 grains; one stool had twenty-three large, fine, heads. Any grain growing by itself in good soil will develope wonderfully. Selection of heavy seed will do much. Culling the large, full ripe heads, and saving for sowing only the heaviest grains from them, will greatly improve the result, but the climax is reached by very thin sowing in drills, giving hand culture, wedding and hoelng, and continuing this with the most careful culling of heads and selection of seed by weight year after year. The improvement is rapid.

The State Horticultural Society of Iowa passed unanimously a resolution approving the decision of the Committee in New York, who awarded the "Gree-ley Prize" to the Concord Grape.
