One thing is essential to the cultivation of this crop with the best results. The earthing up of the hills should be done but once. If done at several thines, new sets will be formed at each time; many of the sets will form tubers too small to be of much use, and yet from their numbers will considerably diminish the growth of tubers from the first settings; and the crop will be smaller and less sizable, than if earthed but once.

Other things, though not essential, are relatively important—one is, that the seed potato should not be cut. Opinions, we are aware, differ on this point; but experience and careful observation-flave convinced us, that plants from cuttings do not, as a general thing, grow as vigorously, are not as healthy, not as able to resist the potato disease, as those from whole potatoes. One tuber ill a hill of medium size—a little smaller or a trifle larger, say from the size of a pullet's egg to that of a full grown hen—is the best seeding. One in a hill is better than more, and those of medium size are about as good as very large ones for planting, while the latter are worth more for the table. If we were to cut a seed potato, in any case, it should be simply to pare off a little of the seed end, that the shoots might be fewer and stockier in growth-not trailing vines, but erect, tree-like, nittle of the seed end, that the shoots might be fewer and stockier in growth—not trailing vines, but erect, tree-like, with strong lateral branches.

Another item is, the planting in hills. If planted in drills, they shade each other too much, especially if earthed up too often with the plough. The vines, with such treatment, are too much like those growing in a damp cellar, imperfectly lighted—such as indicates, to the experienced observer, too many tubers, but too few pounds of tubers at their base, and altogether too unequal in size, varying from that of a pin's head upwards. Planting in hills, and managing the seed so as to get but few shoots on each, and these thick and stout, with short, thick laterals, gives a smaller number but a larger thick and stout, with short, thick laterals, gives a smaller number but a larger weight of tubers, and more satisfactory when they come upon the table.

Early planting is another thing worth considering, so long as the potato disease continues. Before its appearance, we had grown famous crops, planted as late as the first of July. Since its advent, early planting, though not in all seasons a preventive, is safer than late. Potatoes, if planted the last of April or early in Mayagre less liable to the blight than if planted later.

Another consideration is, that nitrogenous manures, as Peruvian guano, strong stable manures, and others of a stimulating character, are not as well suited to ting character, are not as well suited to ting character, are not as well suited to this crop, so long as there is danger of the blight, as to some others. It may be good economy for the market gardener to ap-ply highly stinuiating manures to pota-toes, his object being to put them early into market, while the price is still high; but the farmer, especially if distant from market, should be contented with a slow-er growth and a later maturity, more anx-ious for a sound crop than for an early one.

Mineral manures are best adapted to his object. Now potash, soda, lime, sul-phuric acid and cillorine, are special re-quirements of the potato plant. Virgin soil, if of anything like a fair, medium quality, contain all these in sufficient quantity, contain an trees in sundering quantity for one potato crop, and in most soils for many. But in soils that have been long cultivated with little or no manure, they are not always found; and if there is a deficiency in these, the potato crop is not likely to greated as well to crop is not likely to succeed as well as from the general character of the land one might expect. Our object in penning this article is partly, to recommend a special compost for the potato, one which experience has proved to be good—good enough to ensure from soils of but medium quality, not in high condition, and without other manure, fair to large crops of sound tubers, (say from 100 to 200 bushels an acre), of a quality hard to hear. It remists of increases (say from 100 to 200 bushels an acre), of a quality hard to beat. It consists of ingredients that are cheap, easy to find, and adapted to supply the necessities of the potato crop, if, perchance, they are not already in the soit.

The compost we recommend is—ten ushels of unleached wood ashes, four bushels of unleached wood ashes, four bushels of time, freshly staked, (systemshell is best, or, if you cannot easily obtain it, substitute in its place from twice to three times the quantity of leached ashes, which will do about as well), two bushels of pluster, and one bushel of common sait, to be mixed as evenly as may be, for one acre, and applied in the hill.—This mixture, we believe, will disappoint no one who will try it. We have tried it often, and it has, in every case, more than answered our expectations.

We will now suggest a mode of cultiva-often, and it has, in every case, more than answered our expectations.

We will now suggest a mode of cultivation which is labor-saving, and will be satisfactory to any one who will try it on a feasible soil. 1st. Plough one inch deeper than the land has been used to being ploughed. 2d. After a few days, level and freshen the surface by running a many toothed harrow over it, following the furrows, if sod, but crossing them if not. 3d. Two or three days after this furrow out, both ways, two feet ten inches to three feet each way, with a small, double mould plough, about four inches deep, without disturbing the sod, if that be the state of the land. 4th. Drop, at the crossings of the furrows, a small handful (such that the quantity, specified above, will go over about one acre) of the above described mixtures, and in dropping it be careful to spread it somewhat, so that it may mingle with considerable soll, and not prove so heating as to burn the seed and prevent sprouting. 5th. Drop one medium sized or rather small potato on the mixtures, at the centre of each crossing, so as to bring the rows traight in both directions; and cover, by running a bush-harrow over the surface, till the furrows are filled, and the whole surface is made smooth. 6th. Just as the sprouts begin to break ground, run the bush-harrow over the surface again, enough to barely disturb the soil, and to kill any weeds that may have started.—7th. When the tops are six ar eight inches high, run a horse-hoe or cultivator between the rows, both ways, with the shares so set as to throw earth against the tops, thus forming father broad but not higher hills. This but once, for reasons before stated.

The work, till harvesting, is now done, unless the weeds should become there.

higher hills. This but once, for reasons before stated.

The work, till harvesting, is now done, unless the weeds should become threatening, in which case it may be well to run a small, light harrow between the rows occasionally, as long as it can be done without injury to the tops.

If our suggestion, with regard to making straight rows be attended to, the solling or earthing up will be done more perfectly, and with less trouble; and at harvest time the potato digger can be used to greater advantage.—Farm and Fireside Journal.

A DURABLE AND CHEAP FLOOR FOR A DURABLE AND CHEAF FLOOR FOR A CELLAR.—If the cellar have a good gravel bottom use grout without paving, if not pave with small stones and beat a little with a maul of any kind. After paving it, it is better to let it stand a week, walking occasionally on it. Then slack half a barrel of lime and mix with course sand; after a day or two mix again and use half a bushel of cement, then overlay your floor and make it smooth. You have a floor for all time. The above will grout a space of about 600 square feet.—Rats may enter by the door or window, but by no other entrance, after this floor becomes hard.—Hughson J.

MEADOW LANDS.-If meadow lands MEADOW LANDS.—If meadow lands are depastured in autumn they are stripped of their natural protection, and if depastured in spring, the shooting plants are "nipped in the bud." It is enough to carry off a crop of grass, too often, without making any return in the way of top-dressing, even on land laid down as a hungry waste, without stripping the land of the falling blades in autumn, or the young shoots in spring. This system of exhaustion can lead only to sterility and poverty.

mind is the most valuable and the most important; and in this scale the whole of agriculture is in a natural and just order; the beast is an informing principle to the plow and cart; the laborer is as reason to the beast, and the farmer is a thinking and presiding principle to the laborer.—

(LATE POWELL'S) EMBROCATION, For all. Diseases incident to Horses, Calle, and the Human Flesh, requiring the use of an external application.

This new Compound, propared by a practical Chemist having a full knowledge of all the medical virtues of each ingredient that enters into its composition, is warranted to exceed anything of the kind ever yet offered to the public as an external application for the diseases which it is recommended. We are satisfied that it will work its own road into the confidence of all who use it, and those who try it once will never be without it, and therefore we rely on experience as the barries of the state of the public and the pronounced by Application ever used. This Embrocation has been put up for over eight years, and it is only through the increasing demand and urgent request of my friends and the public that is send it forth as the grand remediat agent for the various diseases, to which that noble and useful animal, the horse, is subject.

Many remedies have been offered to the public under different forum, some of these are injurious, others at best of little use, and many wholly improper to answer the puroposes for which they are recommended.

A judicious and really seful composition, free first these object them, has therefore long been destruct the sum of the public of the public.

This Embrocation was extensively used by the Government during the war.
