"Boy Lost"

The following beautiful will, which we find in the Hoosier Spectator, is published, being confident that it will repay a perusal by all, and by our lady readers.

He has black eyes, with long lashes, red cheeks, and hair almost black, and curly. He is a fine looking fellow, with full trousers buttoned on; had a habit of whistling, and liked to ask questions. He was a very good fellow, and a very pleasant house and much company. Everything like such an orderly put-away look—nothing underfoot—no dirt. But my eyes are aching for the light of whittlings and cut paper on the floor of tumbled down cardhouse; of wooden cattle and sheep, of popguns, bows and arrows, whips, toys, cards, blocks and trumpery.

I want to see boots—riggering, and kites—making. I want to see crumblers and tables turned the wrong way about. I want to see a man who is not a Squire went to a dark closet and abstracted therefrom a huge book that looked like a dictionary, which he took to some other man's book. He perused one page (the first he came to) and looked up and said:

"Accordin' to law there are two ways of startin' intew the merits of this case. One is to let the jury decide, and the other is to let the judge decide. I am inclined to let the jury decide, but I will let you decide."

I immediately assumed a perpendicular position, and said: "I will let the jury decide, but I will let you decide."

When the trial was supposed to be in full blast I rose to point of order, with a sarcastic smile, and said: "I will let the jury decide, but I will let you decide."

It may be plain to the Court, the young scions of dilapidated intellect stand here in your patrid presence victimized and abused, and I feel it my duty to bring to the attention of the Court the fact that the defendant is a man of high intelligence, and that the plaintiff is a man of low intelligence.
