FOOT BOT IN SHEEL

This distressing and destructive mala-This distressing thid destructive malady is seldom properly understood or treated, and the result is that, though checked, it breaks out again and again. This is because so few tarmers read and inform themselves thoroughly about their business, and because even those well informated perform survical operations in sections. ness, and because the state of the state of perform surgical operations in so careless a manner. In the April number of the American Agriculturis, we explained the structure of the sheep's foot and orithe structure of the sheep's foot and orligin of the disease known as the fouls.—
This never need be confounded with foot rot, though we doubt not it is often the frequesor of it, for it puts the foot in excellent preparation to take it easily.

Contagiousness of Hoof Rot.—There are some medical men, we believe, who deny that any disease is contagious, and they deny the contagiousness of hoof-rot.—They are, we presume, right just so far:—were a perfectly healthy foot, sound and clean, to be exposed to the contagious viris, it would probably take it at once.—The disease is often long in reaching that point which causes the sheep to go lame, and it progresses gradually, first causing limping; then the lifting of one foot; then severe lameness of both forefeet; then going upon the knees, which brings the feet in contact with the breast. It does not involve other parts of the system does not involve other parts of the system until far advanced. Then, the feet be-come masses of rotteness; maggots breed in them and work into the flesh, and this corruption is communicated to the breast. During the whole course of the disease, until near the last, the sheep has good appetite and digestion, and is in no other way affected. On this account the cure is, theoretical-On this account the cure is, theoretically, very simple and sure. In practice, it is just as simple, if thoroughly done. The well cleaned hoofs, softened by soaking in dewy grass or on a rainy day, or otherwise, are pared with cutting pliers and very sharp knives until very particle of diseased matter is taken away, even if it involves the removal of all the hoof; they are then washed with warm water and again and syneared with some caustic are then washed with warm water and soap, and sucared with some caustic paste, or fluid, or the sheep forced to stand in a hot, sacurated solution of blue vitriol for ten minutes.

In discussing the origin of hoof-rot, most writers take sides, either denying its contagionsness, or asserting it most vehemently. For ourselves, we can see no other sensible belief than that it may be originated whenever the hoofs, being softened by moisture, are penetrated by foreign substances like gritty soil or sand, and especially when such things, finding and especially wifen such things, finding their way through cracks in the hoof, thus come in contact with the sensitive lamellæ, or the papillary tissues, when they induce acute inflamation. The na they induce acute inflamation. The natural growth of the hoof adapts it to the wear and tear of gravelly and rocky hill sides, and on such localities the outer walls wear off fast, so that they are nearly even with the sole, and the foot is neat and trim; but on soft ground, in stables or in yards, the growth of the outer walls as o much more rapid than the wear, that they grow long, curl under the sole, and turn up in front, throw the wear back upon the heels and keen them more or upon the heels, and keep them more or less inflamed, and are themselves liable to cracks and splits, which, if foreign sub-stances work in, readily involve the sen-sitive portion of the boor in inflamation. Where the horn-forming tissue become inflamed, the character of the horn form inflamed, the character of the horn formed is changed; its quantity is greatly increased, but it is soiter, owing to the mixture of pus and foreign matter, and in portions has a fungoid appearance. The walls of the hoof become detached from walls of the hoof become detached from the foot in spots of larger or smaller extent, owing to the fact that as soon as the lamelles become diseased the horn they secrete has no consistence, and hence the walls have no hold upon the foot.—The pus which constantly exudes from the sores has the quality of inducing the same disease, if it comes in contact with inflamed or wounded surfaces of the feet of other sheep. We see, then, good reasons for the views that the hoof-rot originates only in wet locations, or on ground sons for the views that the hoof-rot originates only in wet locations, or on ground which is not dry, and where sheep's hoofs are liable to crack from over-growth and softening by water, and exposed to grit, and that where the malady is otherwise unknown, it may be communicated to a sound flock by the introduction of one sheep having the disease.—American Agriculturist.

CULTIVATING ORCHARDS.

Apple orchards left to themselves bear Apple orchards left to themselves bear only on alternate years, with such uniformity, that "bearing years" have come to be regarded as the order of nature, rather than a human device. The trees, in average soil, do not have aliment enough to give full cropsevery year. Cultivation and manuring will change all this, and give us remunerative crops every tivation and manuring will change all this, and give us remunerative crops every season. Possibly manuring might do this even if the orchard were left in grass. But the danger is, if the orchard is left unplowed, it will not get the manure.

The common objection offered to plowing is the damage done to the roots of the trees. We have no doubt that an orchard might be plowed so deep and so near the trunk of the trees as to damage it past hope of recovery. But discretion is to be used, and the plow is to be kept so near the surface under the trees, as not to break off the long roots. It has also been ascertained that grain crops are not good for orchards. We have known orchards to be made barren for several years in consequence of a crop of rye. Grain been ascertained that grain crops are not good for orchards. We have known orchards to be made barren for several years in consequence of a crop of rye. Grain crops, unless buckwheat be an exception, take from the soil what the tree needs, and shade the land too much. Root grops are the most desirable, because they require a good deal of manure and thorough tillage to make them profitable.— The frequent stirring of the soil, and the fertilizers, are the wants of the apple tree, and the root crop enables the farmer to give these to his orchard, and at the same time he is remunerated for his labor.

Potatocs, carrots, beets, turnips, are all good crops for the orchard, if you put on manure enough to make them pay. A surplus must be left in the soil to make the apple crop. But will an orchard thus fed bear every year? We have no doubt of it. The apple crop may be made as sure as the root crops. We once plowed up beneath an old apple tree that had an inveterate habit of bearing only every other year, and planted with potatocs, manuring liberally. We had a full crop of apples the second year, and shall always think the manure and the cultivation made the change. Horticulturists who make a specialty of apples, and manure every year, succeed in getting crops every season, with very rare exceptions. David Lyman, Esq., of Middleffeld, Conn., stated, at a recent meeting of the State Board of Agriculture, that he cultivated his orchards, and got crops every year. They were not always full crops, but were enough to pay for the trouble.—Judging from the appearance of his orchards, which we visited a few years since in the apple season, we think that a very modest statement. We have rarely seen so fine a show of apples, even at the county fairs, as could have been gathered from his trees. The secret of his success is cultivation and manure, and a reasonable watch against their depredations. Multitudes of the chrysalides are uncarthed and destroyed. If this was attended to, and the wind-falls picked up and fed to the pigs, we

GRAHAM PUDDING.—Stir Graham flour GRAHAM PUDDING.—Stir Graham flour gradually into boiling water with a little salt, and make about as thick as hasty pudding, or mush, and free from lumps. Eat with tolerably rich milk and sugar, and with the addition of canned peaches or other preserved fruits. If there be any of the pudding left over it may be cut in slices and fried in lard or dripping, and is very good. We have been having the above pudding for breakfast daily for years, and our "boys" are not willing to do without it. It is good for the teeth.

JUSTIFICATION OF OUR CONDUCT.— Every man should be able to justify him-self in the business he persues; and when he cannot, by good and substantial argu-ments, should abandon it.

diseases to which that noble and useful animal the horse, is subject.

Many remedies have been offered to the put ill under different forms, some of these are injurious, others at best of little use, and many who ly maproper to answer the puroposes for which they are recommended. ly improper to answer the partiposes for which they are recommended.

A judicious and really useful composition, free from these objections, has therefore long been devired by many gentlemen who have valuable horses, and are unwilling to trust them to the care of designing and pretended Farriers. Their wishes are at length fully gratified by Dr. Heale being prevailed upon to allow this valuable Embrocation (which has proved so efficiently to the various discuses) to be prepared and brought out to the public.

This Embrocation was extensively used by the Government during the war.
