CUTTING YOUNG GRASS

A correspondent of the Country Gentle-man says, dried grass is what ought to be meant when hay is mentioned. Much io-called hay is but straw, little better than oat or barley straw. Several gentle-men have written very sensibly on the subject of cutting grass young, adducing men have written very sensibly on the subject of cutting grass young, adducing good solid reasons for doing so. There is another argument against the folly of allowing grass to become ripe or nearly so, than the spoiling of hay; it is a fact, beyond the ability of any one to refute, that one week's standing after blooming takes more from the soil than all the previous growth, thus robbing the next year's cro. growth, thus robbing the next year's crop, preventing any after-feed, often causing a breaking up with the plow and re-seed-ing, and thus losing many good varieties of natural grasses which would thrive and thicken the sward if treated right. It is thicken the sward if treated right. It is admitted that a green forage erop of sowed corn or vetches, rye, millet, oats, etc., ent very early, leaves the land a little the poorer for the abstraction, but if any of these ripen, there is such a difference as appears evident to the meanest capacity. The same weakening of the soil is

The same weakening of the soil is caused by the seeding of the grass, while that article makes a very inferior quality of hay, by being allowed to become too old.

Why do the meadows and upland grass in America run out, while in England age only increases their productive powers? The quality likewise improves annually there, thickening for the first twenty years by the addition of the best natural varieties of herbage, which is given a chance to grow and get established by the stronger sorts being out and removed from the surface prior to the choking of the finner species.

the surface prior to the choking of the fi-ner species.

There is no exaggeration in the state-ment that a landlord in England would give a tenant notice to leave his farm if he did not cut his grass till it seeded, and the next of kin to a man farming his own land, would have sufficent ground for ta-king the estate out of his possession and confining him in a functic asylum for wasting his own property and injuring wasting his own property and injuring permanently that which descends to his heirs.

Moreover, by delay, the weight is not so much heavier as may be imagined, for though the seed which is knocked out and lost may be some addition, the dried up stems and leaves that fall off or are eaten by the grasshoppers, are as much loss. It may be taken as a fair criterion when a man collects his hay seeds from his manuers be is a none specimen of a his mangers, he is a poor specimen of a farmer, for his cattle show more sense than he has in rejecting what he has fool-ishly impoverished his land and spoiled has been cattering. ishly impoverishe his hay to obtain.

PROPAGATING BLACKBERRIES. -- The PROPAGATING BLACKBERRIES.—The blackberry propagates itself by suckers; and if these are taken up in Autumn or early in Spring, cut back and set out for growing another season, they will make well rooted plants by Autumn. Another mode is to cut off the roots, by means of a long sharp spade, around the growing plants in Spring, to induce the formation of suckers. This cutting should be done a few inches from the main plant in circular form, and repeated again a few inches further out, so that the young plants may not have long, one sided roots. inches further out, so that the young plants may not have long, one sided roots. A third mode is to take up enttings of the roots in Autumn or early in Spring, say three or four inches long and as a quill, or larger, and set them out in open ground in an upright position, leaving the top a little below the surface. If the soil is rich and mellow they will do well. A fourth and the best mode, when practicable, is to use cuttings with bottom heat; they need not be more than an luch or two long, and should either have the heat of a hot bed, or a propagating house. They should be taken up in Autumn, so as to be started very early in Spring. In the early part or by the middle of Summer, they will do to set out in open ground, and will make good plants the same season. By this mode there will scarcely be a failure. The soil for these bottom-heat a failure. The soil for these bottom-heat cuttings, should be a mixture of about two-thirds of clean sand thoroughly mixed with one-third of leaf-mold, with a portion of finely diffused old manure.

Budding Freit Trees.-From about BYDDING FRGIT TRIES.—From about the middle of July to the last of August is considered the most favorable time to bud fruit trees. It is a simple operation, requiring no special art, and is performed in a brief period. To the novice, we will available the research of the novice. will explain the process—well knowing that old fruit culturists need no instructions. Budding is the introduction of the bud of one tree beneath the bark of another. This should be done when the new wood is in its most vigorous growth. A bud is taken from a branch of this continuous co year's growth, with a small portion of the bark, cut lengthwise. This is insert-ed beneath the bark of the tree intended to be budded—a slight incision being made to receive it. The edges of this bark are then raised and the bud pushed in. A bandage of cloth, bass or cornin. A bandage of cloth, bass or corn-kusk, is wrapped round, and then the job is completed. Care should be taken not to bruise the bud or bark. Some of our best fruits are propagated in this way.

THE OR STONE FOR DRAINS.—A farmer asked me to-day, as he was tidit g past, whether it was better to use tiles or stones whether it was better to use tiles or stones for underdrains, and which was the chempest. I think a stone drain can be made just as efficient as a tile drain, no better and no worse; and then in regard to the cost of making the drains with stones or tiles, I told him that it depended on the men he got to dig the drains. If he could get men that knew how to dig narrow drains, no wider than is necessary for the tiles, using narrow spades and a segue to the control of the could be the control of the could get men that knew how to dig narrow drains, no wider than is necessary for the tiles, using narrow spades and a segue to tiles, using narrow spades and a scoop t tiles, using narrow spades and a scoop to clean out the bottom, a drain might be dug in less than half the time required to dig a drain wide enough to lay stones in. But if he got men who could not be persuaded to dig a narrow drain, and who would persist in digging them just as wide for small tiles as for stones, he might just as well use stones, if he had them near by on his land.—Genesce Furmer.

WINE MAKING.—An experienced wine maker gives the following directions for making wine: making wine:

Pick the grapes off the stem when fully ripe, rejecting bad ones. Pass them thro' one of the Wine Mills to tear open the skins, but not to bruise the pulp. Press moderately; then get all that remains in order to make brandy or an inferior wine. order to make brandy or an inferior wit of. Strain and fill into clean barrels of. Strain and fill into clean barrels; then insert a bent tube tight in the bung, and let the lower (outside) end rest under the surface of water in a bucket, so that all the gas shall escape, the air will not get to the wine. When it has done fermenting, rack it off into clean barrels, bung it up, and set in a cool place; bottle it in a few months. The great secret of making good wine is to select only the best grapes, and not press out the sour portion of the pulp.

FRUIT FLAVORED AT WILL.—A gardener of Gand has after many trials, succeeded in giving any kind of fruit the flavor he pleases while it is still on the tree. Let us take an apple for instance; he pricks it rather deeply in four or five places with a large needle, and then lets it dip for awhile in a bowl containing a liquid possessing the flavor he wishes to communicate. After a few seconds this liquid will have penetrated into the pulp; and this operation being repeated two or three times, at intervals of eight or ten days, the apple is left to ripen on the tree, and will subsequently be found to have acquired the taste either of strawberry, raspberry, cloves, etc., according to the llquid employed.

TO TRANSPLANT CABBAGE, &c.-Cal To Transplant Cabbage, &c.—Cabbages, tomatoes, sweet potatoes, and other similar plants, can be safely transplanted in the hottest weather, by the following plan. Take with you a pall of water, scoop out a hole for each plant large enough to hold a plat, and fill nearly full of water. As it soaks away set your plant in it, drawing in the earth and covering the surface with dry dirt. Shade it if you please, as they will do better, but will do well without. This plan is much the best, as they do not require watering, and the earth does not bake on the surface, as it will when watered after setting.

GREEN CORN.—A writer in the Germantown Telegraph says that green corn may be kept the year round by pickling it with the busk on, in brine strongenough to preserve cueumbers, care being taken to keep it covered with brine Boiling it in a good supply of water will freshen it sufficiently carbe table. The worth trying. for the table. It is worth trying.
