Agricultur al.

There are great complaints made in Delaware and New Jersey and in certain parts of Maryland, especially in those districts where the peach was at one time largely and profitably cultivated, that the peach trees are dying out. The prevailing disease is the yellows, and for this no adequate remedy appears to be known. Without venturious to speak authoritatively on the subjust of speak authoritatively of speak authoritatively and the speak cannot be grown to advantage. Hut on the soils that are usually well adapted to their growtheast well as they did years ago. Two causes have co-operated in injuring the permanence of our peach orchards—the first being the common custom of planting only grafted trees, and the other the rapid impoverishment of the soil where peach orchards have been established. The graft, in our opinion, partakes largely of the nature of the parent stock, and if that is diseased, the graft will also be sickly likewise. There are a few orchards known to us which are eatirely of seedling fruit, and although it requires more pains when the trees are in the nursery to discriminate between those that will bear large, pulpy fruit, and those that produce nothing better than the commonest kind, yet a careful study of the leaf of the tree will indicate whether the fruit which the trees of choice fruit have been planted, the chances are that trees bearing similarly choice fruit will be the result. It CONCERNING PEACH O' CHALEDS. tree will bear will be worthless. If the seeds of choice fruit have been planted, the chances are that trees bearing similarly choice fruit will be the result. It has been so with us in a majority of instances, and we see no reason why it should not be so with others. Seedling trees are invariably longer lived than grafted trees, and are subject to fewer diseases. But no peach orchard will be vigorous for many years unless it is well attended to. The trees must be regularly examined twice a year for worms at the base of the tree, and the worms cut out from the bark, or they will girdle it and the tree will die. The orchards must be ploughed regularly every spring, and no clover or grass suffered to grow up among the trees, or they will be seriously injured thereby, and the fruit will ripen badly. Hoed crops, well manured, may be planted in a young peach orchard not only without danger, but to the manifest advantage of the trees; but these hoed crops should be restricted to turnips, beets and potatoes. Corn grows too close, covers the ground too much, and robs the soil of so large a portion of the potash, that its cultivation in a peach orchard should be avoided. Nevertheless every peach orchard should be broken up with the plough each spring, and if not cultivated in light hoed crops, should be left fallow. But herein hes the cause of the rapid deterioration of the soil that is best adapted to the growth of the peach in our climate. All such soils are of light texture, and the constant exposure year after year of the raw earth to the hot suns and heavy rains, is certain to light texture, and the constant exposure year after year of the raw earth to the hot suns and heavy rains, is certain to exhaust it of those substances that constitute the chief nutriment of the peach trees. In soils containing potash and the phosphates the peach thrives. But potash and the phosphates are readily exhausted by hot suns and leaching rains, and as they fall the peach lauguishes.—An annual broadcasting of bone dust, wood ashes would be found of immense service in supplying the annual loss. service in supplying the annual loss, and would render the same land capable of bearing peaches for many years. An instance in illustration of this lact is An instance in illustration of this fact is within our knowledge and may be cited here. A peach orchard twelve years old came in possession of a new proprietor. The orchard sho wed signs of failure and he was warned by the neighbors that he had better commence planting a new orchard, as the old one would not live more than a year or two longer. He thought the matter over, and finally concluded he would try an experiment. He caused the ground to be broken up deeply in the fall, and just before winter set in he removed the earth for a foot in depth around the root of each tree, and in the basin so formed deposited a peck of leached ashes. In the spring he caused the holes to be filled up. The ground near to the hills that had been left unbroken by the plough was well loosened with the mattock, and after harrowing the winter failow, the orchard was cross ploughed and harrowed, and planted in well manured drills with notators and sugar to the after harrowing the winter fallow, the orchard was cross ploughed and harrowed, and planted in well manured drills with potatoes and sugar beets. The change in the trees was remarkable.—That summer they bore heavily. The following spring the same orchard was heavily top-dressed with wood ashes, ploughed and left to lie fallow. Nothing more was done for several years except to plough the land annually and take off an occasional crop of beets or turnips or potatoes. But there were no longer any signs of decadence. The peach trees seemed to have taken a new lease in life, and although in the course of the next ten years, some thirty or forty of them that had suffered most died out, the remainder of the four hundred of which the orchard was composed continued in vigorous health and bore annually heavy crops. At the end of that time a change of proprietors took place—the orchard fell into neglect and five years later there was scarcely a hundred trees alive.—Maryland Farmer.

A Common Farmer.

A correspondent of the Germantown Attegraph writes as follows: I am only a common or plain farmer, I cultivate about fifty acres of land, and much of the labor is performed by my own hands including the regular attendance at market. My land is good—I made it so, without buying manure. I keep horses enough to do the work; and cows and pigs much more numerous than any of my neighbors in proportion to the same amount of land. I cultivate every foot of soil I can, and it is done in the best manner. I have a good sized garden, stocked with a little of everything, including all the valuable small fruits—thanks to the advice received through your columns. I have my orchard of apples, pears, etc., and make considerable money out of it, supplying all our wants. I find that well tilled land, having previously been put in a high state of cultivation, will produce not only twice but thrice as much as moderately good land moderately worked.

Commencing in a very small way—going in debt for nearly the whole place—I have succeeded in paying off the entire debt, building a new barn, repairing the house, and adding generally to the appearance and value of the improvements. I have also money on interest. I pay cash for everything I buy. We live as well as there is any desire on the part of any of my family. My wife is not overworked. We have all the leisure time wished for. We keep the Sabbath. We do unto others as we wish them to do to us—are ready to perform a neighborly act at all times. Our children are being well educated.

All this has been accomplished by attending to my own affairs, and not A correspondent of the Germantown All this has been accomplished by attending to my own affairs, and not troubling myself unnecessarily with the affairs of my neighbors, or idling away time at shops, stores and taverns, as is too much the case yet in this region, and criticising the conduct of others who are not members of these congregations. not members of these congregations.

I mention these things not in the way of boasting—for there is in them nothing to warrant boasting—but simply to show how easy a matter it is to "get along," if, with a reasonable degree of good health, and abstinence from all that can intoxicate, we use properly and diligently the time and ability God has given to us; and particularly for the purpose of encouraging others, especially young men about to commence farming on their own account to do the best they can.
