Agriculkural.

AN OUT-DOOR CELLAR

It is very unwise to store a large quantity of vegetables in the cellar of a farmhouse, even if it is of sufficient capacity. In the latter part of the winter there will be some decay, and nothing can be more detrimental to health than living over a ween of decaying records. over a mass of decaying vegetable mat-ter. But few cellars are large enough to hold the products of the farm that requires winter storage. As we devote more attention to the economical feed more attention to the economical teca-ing stock, the necessity of good root cel-lars will be felt more seriously. Car-rots, beets, parsnips, cabbage and the like, require cellar room. A sandy hill-side is the best place for making a cel-lar, as in this situation good draimage is side is the best place for making a cellar, as in this situation good drainage is secured, as well as easy access. A good cellar, however, can be made in any place where the water will not be within three or four feet of the surface. Especial pains must be taken to secure good drainage. Dig down as far as drainage will allow, and throw the earth back to be used in banking up.—If rough stones are to be had, they are best for the walls; if not, posts and planks will mswer. A strong ridge pole is necessary, which must be supported by posts. Bank up the sides with earth, and plank the roof and cover with straw or leaves, over which rough boards, or something of the kind must be placed to prevent blowing up. An easy entrance should be made at the front by digging down the earth, in a gradual slope; and as this part will be expose! to the weather, it should be made double; and if of boards, filled between with straw. Where stone is used, a space for air is sufficient.—Michigan Farmer.

ROAD SAND .- The sand obtained ROAD SAND.—The gand obtained from turnpikes, or roads his eadamized with any sort of stones like granite, hard blue stones, very difficult to break and pulverize, has a peculiar value.—The grinding of such rocks or stones under the iron-rimmed wheels of wagons, the wear of horse shoes and the mixture of this ground rock with the manure scattered along the roads—produces a compound which is found to be highly acceptable to trace and plants duces a compound which is found to be highly acceptable to trees and plants.—
The granite rock, we know, is rich in potash and silicia; but is not these elements alone which give this road sand its peculiar value. By the process of grinding and triturating inert substances, such as oyster shells, charcoal, quicksilver, we develop medicinal and other virtues which these substances do not possess in their critical from. And other virtues which these substances do not possess in their crude from. And so it is supposed to be with road sand. By the constant grinding and triturating of the iron-bound wheels and horses' shoes, the comminuted granite becomes prepared for the use of plants; and when this road sand is mixed with the compost heap and saturated with liquid manure, it is found to help the efficacy of the compost in a remarkable efficacy of the compost in a remarkable manner. Under the influence of road and of this kintl atone, it is said that wheh applied to lawns, white clover is sure to sbring up in the greatest abundance and luxuriance where it had never been soon before. But I Stand or been seen before.—Dr. J. S. Houghton, in Gardener's Monthly.

Fences.—The materials and labor required to build and keep fences in repair are among the heavy items of farm expense. The cost of the land on which I they stand is another item on which J. Harris, of Rochester, discourses as follows in the American Agriculturist:

How much land does an old-fashioned fence occupy? I have always thought it took up a good deaf of land, but never had the curiosity to measure. But this summer we have been building a stone wall along the whole west side of the farm, and after it was completed, and the old fence removed, I was surprised at the quantity of land we had gaired. The ground, of course, might have been ploughed closer to the fence, but taking the case as it actually was, the old rail fence with stones, weeds, rubbish, &c., occupied a strip, of land one rod wide. 'A field 31 rods long and 41 rods wide, contains about six acres.—If surrounded by such a fence, it would occupy a little over three quarters of an acre of land. A farm of 160 acres so fenced would have twenty acres of land taken up in this worse than useless manner. Not only is the use of the land löst, but it is, in the majority of cases, a nursery of weeds, and, in ploughing, much time is lost in turning, and the headlands and corners are seldom properly cultivated.

FENCES.—The materials and labor re-

WEEVILS IN GRANARIES.—Some years since, accident discovered to a French farmer a very simple and efficient method of preventing, or rather destroying this insiduous pest in corn and grain houses.

Happening to deposit, in one corner of a building in which there was stored a quantity of grain, a few sheep skins from which the wool had not been pulled, he found, upon examining them a few days after, that they were literally covered with dead weevils. The experiment was repeated, and always periment was repeated, and always with the same result.

with the same result.

On stirring the corn, (wheat, probably,) he was surprised to find that although previous infested to a degree that forbid all hope of saving it from immediate destruction by this pertinacious foe, not a single insect was to be found among it. The experiment is certainly worth trying. Instead of the sheep skins, which are quite valuable, we might substitute those of the woodchuck, who is increasing to an inconvenient. chuck, who is increasing to an inconvenient and expensive extent. What killed the weevils, whether the fatty matter on the skin, or something else, we have not been able to learn. At any rate, let us try the woodchuck skins.

A USEFUL HINT.—A subscriber writes as follows: "A tin tube made like a syphon driven into the vent of a barrel of wine or cider, and the other end inserted into a vial of water, will prevent the air from entering the barrel, while the gas escapes through the water. Make the barrel otherwise tight. When the cider or wine in the barrel is done working, the water in the bottle will cease bubbling. It requires no filling up; and there is no loss. I have tried it." We will only add that it can be made by any tinplate worker, and when once made can always be kept ready for use.

IIOPS.—A gentleman who writes from lowa that he raised three tons of hops last year from four acres of ground, and sold them at fifty-one and a half cents per pound, making some $3,000, and sells the roots for $20 per acre. And we do not see why they cannot be cultivated just as successfully in other parts of the country, especially in the fine truck lands of Delaware, Maryland and Virginia, and in some parts of Pennsylvania. The revenue of a single farm alone, at the above rates of production and sale, would be immense. and sale, would be immense, MINCE PIES.—Take a pound of beef, free from skin and strings, and chop it very fine; then two pounds of suet, which likewise pick and chop; then add three pounds of currants, nicely cleansed and perfectly dry, one pound and a half of applies, the peel and juice of a lemon, half a pint of sweet wine, half a nutmeg, and a few cloves and mace, with a pimento in fine powder; have citron, orange and lemon-peel ready, and put some in each of the pies when made.

GRANARIES.—Clean out, and make varmin-proof in some way—best by setting them on posts capped with flat stones or tin pans. After grain is in, care must be incessantly exercised, less by some heedlessness the steps are left down, or in some other way mice get in. After that, trapping, fumigation, do., must be resorted to, and these are always uncertain in operation.
