The wisdom of our State authorities in organizing the "Reserves" was com-pletely vindicated, not alone in their op-portune arrival in Washington, in July, 1861, but in their whole subsequent con-duct during the war. They were a marked organization in the army, con-sidered as, "par excellence," the repre-sentative of the commonwealth. By their patient endurance of all the priva-tions of the camp, the hardships of the march, and by their lofty valor and he-roic endurance, of auffering exhibited on every battle-tield, from Drainsville to the Wilderness, they have exhibited the no-blest traits in our human nature, and have engraved the name ot the "Penn-sylvania Reserves" upon the tablets of our State and nation's history, where it will remain to be read with pride so long as virtue is honored, valor esteemed, and the republic lives. I would not be under-stood, for one moment, as drawing an in-vidious distinction between the "Re-serves" and the other gallant men that went from this State in other regiments. They are all alike entitled to the highest honor that we can bestow upon them; but I am led to speak directly of the "Reserves" in alluding to the eminent service from motives of the purest and most patriotic character. He was living in comfortable retirement, surrounded by all that conduces to make life pleas-ant and happy, at that age when the fires of ambition burn but feelby in any breast, and of him. in confortable retirement, surrounded by all that conduces to make life pleas-ant and happy, at that age when the fires of ambition burn but feely in any breast, and of him, I think, it can be truthfully said that no personal ambi-tion influenced or controlled his action.— He loved retirement; his lighest delight was in his home and family, and yet from all these sweet and endearing influ-ences he turned away, and yielding up comfort, peace, retirements, home with its dear ones, all for the great love he bore his country, stepped forward and of-fered his services, his sword, and, if need be, his life an the altar of the republic.— This exemplifies the highest human vir-tue, and beyond it no man can step. Before the open grave of this good nan, this brave and cacomplished soldier, we stand to-day; and that heart must indeed be wown in sorrow, that so good and true a man has fallen in our midst. It will be a sad day in the history of this Republic when those who fought and sufficiend its preservation are permit-ted to die unregretted, and be buried without a single tear failing upon their last resting place. So long as the service of the men who risked their all for the preservation of our free institutions is recognized and cherished by the people. last resting place. So long as the service of the men who risked their all for the preservation of our free institutions is recognized and cherished by the people, so long will the love of the people for our institutions be a sure defence against all foes. But if gratitude for their inestima-ble services should ever die out, and the men who did so much and suffered so much for the nation be forgotton or per-mitted to die, and their virtues be "un-honored and unsung," then will public virtue have ebbed so low, and the love of liberty Le flickering so faintly, that in the midst of its pretended friends the Government of our fathers will cease to be the heritage of the people. This meet-ing here to-day is not only a just and proper tirbute to the libustrious dead, but an assurance to the living that their ser-vices in behalf of the country will ever be remembered. They may feel assured that, as one by one they pass away to that "bourne from whence no traveller re-turns," and
