BY FREDRIKA BREMER,

"Monsieur shall not be detained long by me," rejoined the girl, passing out of Lie room by another door. I did not sit down, but walked over to the bed, where the patient was lying very still-so still indeed that I could not detect any breathing. A woman's cap was on the bead and the end of a sheet concealed the face. I ventured to turn this down carefully, and beheld the eye-less sockets and grinning teeth of a hu-man skull! Whilst man claims, with a yearning sigh. Promises that ne'er shall fail less sockets and grinning teeth of a hu-man skull! I started back in horror, and at the same moment the door by which the girl had left was thrown open, and in marched, one after the other, four tail human figures, in black gowns and musks. I knew at once, then, that I was to be robbed, and probably murdered. I wore a heavy diamond pin and ring, carried a very valuable gold watch, and in money about my person some five hundred francs, but not a single weapon of any kind-resistance being, therefore, out of the question. I felt that my only chance-if, indeed, there were a chance - was to conciliate the rufflans and buy myself off. With a presence of mind, for which I still take to myself considerable credit, I suid at once: As he gazes towards the sky.

OUR BABY. Did you ever see our baby ? Little Tet; With her eyes so sparkling bright, And her skin so lily white, Lips and cheeks of rosy light-Tell you what;

She is just the sweetest baby In the lot

Ah ! she is our only darling.

And to me All her little ways are witty; When she sings her little ditty; Every word is just as pretty

As can be ; Not another in the city Sweet as she.

> You don't think so-you ne'er saw her! Wish you could See her with her playthings clattering, Hear her little tongue a chattering, Little dancing feet come pattering, Think you would Love her just as well as I do-If you could !

Every mother's durling,

I suppose, Is as sweet and bright a blossom, Is a treasure to her bosom, Is as cheering and endearing

As my Rose-Heavenly Father spare them to us

I immediately mentioned the different articles of value and the exact amount of money; "all of which I shall be pleased to present you with, if one of you will be kind enough to escort me to the street above," I added. "You said you had more, Monsleur," "Yes, gentlemen, I have ten thousand francs in the bank of France, and I will willingly add a check for half that amount." Till life's close

Miscellaneous. A TURILLING ADVENTURE.

A THRILLING ADVENTURE. I was a medical student in Paris at the time the strange and startling adventure happened which I am about to record. Tired with long lectures and hard study, I was out one evening for a walk in the fresh air. It was a pleasant night in mid-winter, and the cold, bracing air, as it touched my feverish brow, caused a fearful sensation. Passing through a rather lonely street, near the river I was surprised at meeting a young and pretty girl (at least so she appeared in the dim light of a rather distant street lamp), who carried in her hand some three or four bouquets, which she off-red for sale. "Will Monsteur have a bouquet?" she sked, in a sweet, musical tone, holding out to me a well-arranged collection of beautiful flowers. "The are weat, musical tone, holding out to me a well-arranged collection of beautiful flowers. "The are streed to the stand bards. "Yes, on condition that one of you

THE VEILED VOCALIST-A LONDON STREET ROMANCE.

Some years ago a mysterious paragraph went the round of the press, to the effect that a young and beautiful woman made her appearance every night at ten o'clock in one of our West End squares, and af-ter a superb vocal display, she disappear-ed, no one knew where or how, exactly a the clock struck eleven. The Sunday Times professed to give special and ex-clusive particulars of this anonymous nightingale, as she was termed, and even went so far as to hint broadly that she was a celebrated vocalist married to a peuniless lord, who took this novel mode of enlarging an insufficient income. Of course this plece of family blictory proved to be an invention. I had the good for-tune to hear her on one occasion in Buck-ly square. Seeing a large crowd waiting in an expectant attitude just where a tashionable hotel is located. I inquired the cause, and was told that the mysteri-ous vocalist, the uightingale, was about to show i erself. A stue clock firtick tea a lady dressed in deep mourning, having the upper part of her face concealed by a thick black vell, glided forward and took her place in the centre of a space pur-posely kept clear for her. I decided, from noticing the beautiful formation of the mouth and chin, and the finely rounded, fair throat, that she must be both young and more than commonly attractive. She was accompanied by a little boy, also in deep mourning, who carried an open reticule. Without delay, the nightin-gale commenced a ballad and sang with such surpassing taste and feeling as to hold the miscellaneous crowd in mute and rapt attention. The song was fol-how so set in accomplished artist.— A collection was made; few gave coppers – all who could afford it give silver. The indexiny of which was crowded with visitors, and was returned apparently was informed was the usual reward of the hour's work. When 11 struck, the unknown stopped her song, made 'a light courtesy, and threateneed her away kuickly through the crowd. Hro real his-tory, 1 afterward learned, was a plitful one. She was the An Old-Fashioned Teacher.

standing hand in hand at the window.-- Whoever saw it first, cried out, "I see the star." And often they cried out both together, knowing so well when it would rise aud where. So they grew to be such friends with it, that, they always looked out once again, to bid it good night; and when they were turning around to sleep they would say, "God bless the star !" But while she was still very young, oh, very, very young, the slster drooped, and came to be so very weak that she could no longer stand in the window at night; and then the child looked sadly out by himself, and when he saw the star, turned round and said to the patient pale face in the bed, "I see the star!"
And so the time came-all too soon !- when there was a little grave among the star made long rays down toward him as the saw it through his silent tears.
Now, these rays were so bright, and they eeened to make such a shining way from the to haver; that when the ohild i went to his solitary bed, he dreamed that, lying where he was, he saw a train of people taken up that shining road by angels. And the star, opening, showed bin a great world of light, where many y more such angels waited to receive them.
All theseangels where was waiting turned there up into, the star; and soon!

"They are very pretty," said I, taking them in my hand; and then, somehow, I could not help adding, as I fixed my eyes upon her's, "and so, I think, is their for owner."

their beaming eyes upon the people who were carried up luto the star; and soon came but from the long rows in which they stood, and fell upon the peoples' necks, and kissed them tenderly, and went away with them down avenues of light, and were so happy in their company, that lying in his bed he wept for joy.
But there were many angels who did not go with them, and among them one he knew. The patient face that once had lain upon the bed was glorified and rodi.

"I'n myself a medical student, with consideuble experience among the sick of the honitals; and if you are disposed to trust the charge," I rejoined, already feeling deeph, interested in the fair girl.
"Oh, how hall I thank Monsieur!" she exclaimed, with clasped hands, and an upward, granful look, "Pray, follow me, Monsieur Hooteur." She turued at noce, and moved off at a rapid pace down the street, toward the river Seine, in this direction I was walking when we met.

But why stand there and die like a dog, without a single attempt to escape? At the worst it could be but death, and there was a bare possibility 1 might get away.
I fixed my eye on the door which opened on the startway, and with sample, sudden bound reached it, but found it has locked. Then, as the hands of the ruffians the child stretched out his arms and cried, "O my sister, I an here! Take me!" And then she turned her beaming eyes upon him, and it was night; and the star was shining into the room, making long rays down towards him as he saw it through his tears.

From this hour forth, the child looked out upon the star as on the home he was

out upon the star as on the home he was to go to, when his time should come; and he thought that he did not belong to the earth alone, but the star too, because of his sister's angel gone before.
There was a baby born to be a brother to the child; and while he was so little that he never yet had spoken a word, he stretched his tiny form upon his bed and died.

As the child beheld his brother's angel in her arms, he cried: "O sister, I and here!--take me!" And she turned and smiled upon him, and the star was shining.

He grew to be a young man, and was at his books, when an old servant came to him and said:

"Thy mother is no more. I bring her blessing on her dailing son."

"This car isn't going!"
Of course these words caused a general stampede, and Waggs took the best seat.
The cars soon moved off. In the midst of the indignation Waggs was question-blessing on her darling son." Again, at night, he saw the star and all the former company.

Said his sister's sugel to the leader-
"Is my brother come?"
And he said at "Thy Mother."
And a folghty cry of joy went forth-
