How much better is your farm than it was one year ago? How much lov-lier have you made your home by the planting of trees and shrubs? How much better is your-stock of horses, sheep and cattle? How much error have your discovered in your mode of sheep and cattle? How much error have you discovered in your mode of treatment of the different crops you have grown? How much have you learned from your neighbors, from your agricultural paper, from your experience in relation to your farm operations? How much have you done to aid your wife and daughter in their household duties by furnishing them with improved household utensils, and the letter location and arrangement of wells, cisterns, walks, wood pines, cellars and dairy rooms? How much of kindness and charity have you shown towards the needy and helpless? How much better husband, father and brother are you than you were one year ago? Nowis the time to reflect upon all these things.

Rearing Calves for Stock.

The Rural New Yorker says:

If farmers well understood and appreciated raising calves, there would be many more of them raising calves, and much better animals. The same method may be followed in raising for stock for the butcher, unless they are intended for breeding, in which case they should be fed a very small quantity of molasses or sweet food for this when ted in excess, will render the feamales barren and males impotent, the reason for which have been often given. But in animals intended for fattening, sweet foods will strongly develop this quality. Bean or pea meal will be found an excellent addition to the oil meal for stock calves after three weeks old; but they should always be cooked. This made into a porridge and mixed with oil meal will be found very nutritious, and possessing just the qualities desired to develop the frame and muscle of the young animal. Peq. meal is also slightly constinating into the counters of the promoters of the property of the counters of the property o young animal. Pen ment is also slightly constipating—just the counterpart of oil meal. It will be found that one dollar and fifty cents thus expended in feeding a stock calf will make it worth double at six months. Fine callyes may double atsix months. Fine calves may also be raised upon whey, with this addition of oil meal, pea, oat, or barley meal. The whey is principally composed of sugar, and needs to make it a well-balanced food, some others containing muscle-forming and bone building elements. There is no policy so short-sighted in the farmer as that of raising pinched and stunted animals. Twenty-five per cent. added to the cost of raising a worthless calf would develop a fine animal. op a fine animal.

THE USE OF WALKING,-Walking THE USE OF WALKING.—Walking for young and active people, is by far the best exercise; riding for the elderly, middle aged and invalid. The abuse of these exercises consist in taking them when the system is exhausted more or less by previous fasting, or by mental labors. Some persons injudiciously attempt a long walk before breakfast, under the belief that it is conducive to health. Others will get up early to work three hours at some abstuse menwork three hours at some abstuse men-tal toil. The effect of both instances is the same—it subtracts from the power of exertion in the after part of the day. A short saunter or some little reading before this meal is the best indulgence before this meal is the best indulgence of the kind, otherwise the waste occasioned by labor must be supplied by nourishment, and the breakfast will necessarily become a heavy meal, and the whole morning's comfort sacrificed by a weight at the chest, from imperfect digestion of food. These observations craptly expectably to adoptly approximately expectably to a checkly approximately according to the control of the control tions apply especially to elderly persons, who are proud to flatter themselves into the persuasion that they can use their mental or bodily powers in age

PASTURING MEADOWS.—It is a bad thing for all meadows to feed them af-ter mowing, except that rare class where the vegetation is too rank to make hav the vegetation is too rank to make hay. If a field cuts four tons of hay to the acre, feeding a few days might not harm it. But for ordinary mowing land cutting only half as much, grazing cannot fail to reduce the next year's crop, and to shorten the period during which the land can be kept in grass. We noticed this summer in an old meadow the the land can be kept in grass. We noticed this summer in an old meadow the great difference in the yield of hay inside of an old stock-yard, and upon the adjoining land. The circle where the fence had stood was very distinctly marked by the ranker growth of grass. Outside, there had been grazing all through the fall. Inside, the fence had protected the grass. Though the outside had the droppings of the cattle, yet the yield upon the inside was at least a third more, and there was no other nonoticeable cause that the difference in grazing. It is true that by pursuing this plan there is more old fog upon ungrazed land, but that is just what the roots of the grasses need for their winter protection. The ground does not freeze so deep, and the grass starts earlier in protection. The ground does not freeze so deep, and the grass starts earlier in the spring and makes a larger crop of hay,-American Agriculturist.

STRAW FOR HORSES.—The value of straw as a feeding substance was never better proved than by the following fact: A firm having a large number of heavy wagon horses, had frequent occasion for the veterinary surgeon until they were recommended to mix a certain portion of fine cut straw with the the clover hay. This has been practiced now for some years, and their bill for doctoring is at minimum. The partner of the firm, who told me this, said how advantageous it was not to be deprived, as they formerly were, of several horsesto any nothing of the saving in expense and loss. The fact is, the food was too rich or too mucilaginous, for I have often been told that fine hay, unmixed with straw chaff, ballsin the stomach, and thus is deprived of action of the and thus is deprived of action of the gastric juices. We know that too much succulent or rich grasses are injurious, and no doubt straw chaff mixed with it and no doubt straw chaff mixed with it acts mechanically, if not chemically, with advantage. It would be well for our agricultural friends to know that for several thousand horses belonging to the London General Omnibus Company, the food is all passed through the chaff cutter with, I believe, a certain proportion of straw. While spring grazing our hullocks tares, we mix straw with it in their early growth, but as they advance to flowering and podding, this is not required, because their is much wheat and oats grown with this. much wheat and oats grown with this, which gets intermixed on passing through the chaff machine.—J. Mechi.

WATERING .- Horses should never be k pt so long without water that they will drink largely, when they get it. Give it to them often, and they will never injure themselves with it. Nothing is more common than to hitch a team to the plow, and make them work half a day without a drop. What man would submit to such a treatment? If the plow is started at seven in the morning, water should be given before ten: and again in the alternoon by four o'clock. Even if half an hour is thus consumed, more work will be done in a day. The objection that horses on the road should not be "loaded with water," is not valid. A horse weighing 12,000 pounds will not be much encumbered additionally by 28 pounds of water, while the distension will give him adwhile the distension will give him additional strength. Every farmer knows that when he himself undertakes to fift a large log or heavy stone, he can do more by first inflating himself with air, and not unfrequently he loses a button or two from his pantaloons in the operation. Some degree of inflation by water will add to a horse's strength in a similar manner. In driving a horse on the road at a natural gate of nine or ten miles an hour, I have frequently had occasion to observe that he was laboring with perspiration until I left him drink freely, when he ceased to sweat, and evidently traveled more freely. Don't be afraid to give your horse wa'er; the danger is in making them abstain too long—in which case care is meeded.—Country Gentleman.
