SHERIDAN. "What is your opinion of Sheridan ?" " I don't think he is a man of any ability at all : I never did t'nink so; I'li tell you why. At Winchester Sheridan had as much cavalry as Early had men altogether. This the official records show. The battle was fought in a fair, open field from noon till dusk. Early, of course, was defeated, but he made a well-ordered retreat with the loss of but three guns. Now, any man of ordinary ability ought to have captuted every man that Early had with him. He had it in his power, if he had followed it up, to have ended the war in two weeks, for Early could not have made another stand, and Lynchburg could have been taken, and thus all of Lee's communica-tions with Petersburg would have been
