A Night in a Japanese Hotel.

Pumpley, in his book of travels round the world, gives the following very correct sketch of the manner of sleeping in Japan.

In a Japanese house, I watched anxiously the preparations for sleeping. They were simple enough; a mattress in the form of a very thick quilt, about seven feet long by four wide, was spread on the floor, and over it was laid an ample robe, very long and heavy, and the space between the quilt and the robe was filled with large laves. Having pitched the night dress, the sleeper covers himself with another robe, and then, if he has some years' practice in the art of his bed.

It is the most remarkable feature about a Japanese bed is the pillow. This wooden box about four inches high, eight inches long, and two inches wide at the top, but curved at the bottom, is placed on the upper side to rest the neck on, of the elaborate manner of dressing the pillow does not permit the Japanese, especially the women, to press the head on a pillow. Every morning the uppermost paper is rolled up, and the bed is left a clean surface without the expense of washing a pillow.

I passed over the most part of the night in a novel manner, and when I finally closed my eyes, I was in a state of complete relaxation. I was lying on the pillow, and my head was resting on the sharp lower edge of the box. I was in a state of complete relaxation, and when I finally closed my eyes, I was in a state of complete relaxation.

A woman of Fashion sent to the 'Pant.' A sad spectacle was witnessed in the court of General Sessions, New York City, Wednesday, I watched anxiously the proceedings. A woman, who was described as a girl of sixteen years of age, was brought before the court, charged with the murder of her mother.

Deeper and deeper she sank into the abyss of dissipation, and at last her health failed, and she died. Her mother, who was a woman of great wealth, was so shocked by the death of her daughter that she died of grief.

The first annual ball of the 'Fat Men's Association' of New York City was held at Irving Hall last evening. The association now numbers over 150 members, and is the largest of its kind in the city.

Every year a great number of Russian families visit the German watering-places, and many of them have been ruined at the banks. A South German paper announces that the Russian government is now contemplating a visit to the German Empire, and that the Russian government is now contemplating a visit to the German Empire.
