No. 18. Another invasion into the heart of the Indian country was determined on, as the only means of securing a lasting peace. The bill for raising troops for a third western expedition under Colonel Bouquet, received the sanction of the Governor on the thirtieth of May, 1764, but the complement of forces was not obtained till August. On the fifth of that month the troops assembled at Carlisfe, under lieutenant-Colonels Francis and Clayton; and after an address from the Governor, designed to inspire the men and deter them from desertion, the command of the Pennsylvania forces was given to Colonel Bouquet, under whom Colonel Reid was second in command.— War had been declared by Governor Penn against the Shawnee and Delaware Indians, and their confederates, on the seventh of July. On the thirteenth of August the army reached Fort Loudon. having lost in eight days three hundred men by descrition; and on the fifteenth of Sentember arrived at Pittsburg. While at Fort Loudon, Colonel Boquet received despatches from Colonel Bradstreet at. Presqu'isle, announcing that peace had been concluded with the Delawares; and Shawanes but as the savages continued their murders and depredations, neither General Gage nor Colonel Bouquet placed any reliancein their sincerity, and it was resolved to attack them at once. The propriety of this resolution was soon obvious, for the messenger sent to Colonel Bradstreet from Fort Pitt with Bouquet's answerw as murdered by the Indians and placed his head on a pole in the middle of the road. With the faithlessness which characterized all their compacts, the Indians had entered into the treaty of Presqu'isle merely to gain time for removing their families.

On the third of October Colonel Bonque

marched out of Pitisburg with fifteen hundred men, and on the evening of th twenty-fifth encamped at the forks of the Muskingum river, in the midst of the hostile Indian country. The promptitude of this movement, supported by the reputation for strategy, bravery and firmness acquired by the Colonel in the expedition of the preceeding year, struck terror into the councils of the enemy and induced them to sue for peace. Conferences were held with the Delawares the Senecas and the Shawnes. They surrendered the white prisoners who were immediately within their power, and gave pledges for the restoration o those who could not then be brought in; and were also required to render hostoge for their good behavior until peace should be concluded with Sir William Johnson, who was empowered by the crown t treat with them. Two hundred and six prisoners—men, women and children were restored—many of whom were joyfully received in the camp by their relatives who had joined the army with the design of redeeming them from slavery or avenging their deaths. Many of the captives had been carried away when quite young, and had grown up to mangood and womanhood in the wigwam of the savage. They had dwelt long enough with the Indians to acquire a taste for their wild and simple life, and to contract their habits. They had learned the Indian language and forgotten their own, and in many instances between these people of different races had grown up ties of the strongest affection. The separation between the Indians and their oners offected even the hystanders to tears. Force was necessary in many instances to bring the prisoners to the camp, and many who were thus brought in subsequently escaped and returned to live with the Indians. One female, captured at the age of fourteen, had become the wife of an Indian and the mother o several children. When informed that she was to be delivered to her parents her grief knew no bounds. She said "I will not desert my husband, who has been so kind, and my children;" and that night she escaped from the camp. and fled to the wigwam of her India husband. When they delivered the captives to their countrymen, the Indiana loaded them with corn, skins and other treasures: and many of them obtained leave to accompany the army back to Fort Pitt, and employed themselves in hunting and carrying provisions for them on the road. Says a writer of that day "These qualities in savages challenge our just esteem. Cruel and unmercifu as they are by habit and long example in war, yet when they give way to the native dictates of humanity, they exercise virtues which Christians need not blush to imitate. When they once determine to give life, they give everything which in their estimation belong to it. From every inquiry made it appears that no women thus saved was preserved from base motives, or had cause to fear the violation of her honor, and no child was otherwise treated by the person adopting it than the children of his own body."-From their appearance and thei with statements, the Indians suffered greatly during the war. Their clothing, amun tion and provisions were expended, and the most abject misery prevailed among them. In their reduced and feeble state the whites saw greater assurance of safety

A great number of these restored pris oners were brought to Carlisle, and Colonel. Bouquet gave public notice of the fact, in order that those who had lost children might identify and claim them People came hundreds of miles to search for lost relatives and friends, and among them came an old. German woman whose little daughter had been carried away several years before. She went among the throng and closely scrutinized every face and form. Sadly shaking her head at her ill success, she went along the line again, and endeavored to converse with the prisoners, in the hope that she might discover something in the tones of the voice: which would lead to the identification, but she was still unable to designate her daughter. With a heart full of sorrow she told the story of her grief to Colonel Bouquet, dwelling with tenderness on the fact that she used to sing a hymn of which her little daughter was passionately fond.-She was requested by the Colonel lo sing it, which she did in these words:

than in their professed renewal of friend

Allien, und doch nicht ganz Alliene, Bin ich in meiner einsamkeit; Dann wann ich gleich verlassen scheine, Vertreibt mir Jesus selbst die Zeit: Ich bin bey ihm, und er bey mir, So kommt mir gar nichts einsam mer:"•

And before she had finished, the long lost daughter rushed into her arms. A fair-haired little girl, who had been carried away from the banks of the Sus-uehauna, when scarcely five years old, was sought in valu amongst the returned prisoners, and all trace of her was lost Fifty years afterwards, a trader, traveling through the western wilds, stopped at an Indian wigwam for the night; and in the course of the evening he noticed that the hair of the matron of the hut was light and her skin fair. She told him that when a child she lived with her parents_at the Susquehanna river, and had been carried off by the Indians, with whom she had lived ever since. The trader's story was noised abroad, and half a century after little Frances Slocum had been captured, two brothers and a sister started to the far west, to search for the missing member of their family.

·At the cabin door they were met by a woman, painted and Jewelled, and dressed after the manner of the Indians. Sh was unable to converse with them in English, and an interpreter was brought. Then she told them where she had lived when a child, and how many brothers and sisters she had. " How came your nail gone?" asked the sister: "My brother pounded it off in the shop, when I was a child." With this fact the family were familiar. They then asked her what her name was, but she could not remember. "Was it Frances?" they asked; and a strange smile, as of some awakened memory of childhood, lighted up her face as she answered "Yes!". It was the first time she had heard it for fifty years! And when those four looked into each other's eyes, there was a deep instinct of human nature which told them they were brothers and sisters. Then she told the story of her Indian life. She had been captured by the Delawares, and when grown to womanhood had married one of the tribe, and had two daughters, both of whom had likewise married Indian husbands. Her friends endeavored to persuade her to return with them, but all to no purpose. She knew no other mode of life and wished no other society than her Indian family-with them she had lived, and with them she would die.

While those prisoners whose lives had been spared, uniformly spake of the kindness of the Indians towards their captives, yet they described the tortures of those condemned to death as excrutiatingly painful. In the case of one young man, they cut holes in his cheeks through which they passed a small cord. and having tied it to a tree, two of the Indians with red-hot gun barrels seared his naked body. When he attempted to escape from the one by moving around the tree, he was met by the other who forced him to return. This, together with the friction of the cord on the flesh of the cheek was torment indescribable They then tore the scalp from his head and applied bot coals to the skull. They then opened the abdomen, and loosened one end of the intestines which they fastened to a tree, and then applying hot irons to his body, made him move round the tree until his bowels were all out .-Life being now nearly extinct, they titrust a hot cun barrel into his heart which closed the scene of misery and savage cruelty. In other instances they manifested their savage ingenuity by opening the wrists and ankles, and will a forked stick twisting out the rinews.-Sometimes the unhappy victims were laid on their backs upon the ground, and after driving forked sticks into the ground over each arm and leg, to prevent them from moving, the 'savages consumed them with fire, beginning at the feet to prolong their torments. When they returned from their mur derous excursions, they fixed the scalps they had taken on the end of a long pole which their leader carried over his shoulder. All the young men ran out to meet them, and escorted them in bonor to the council house. The scalps were then cut in pleces, fixed on twigs, and placed on the tops of the tents of their eceased relatives, whose deaths, if by the hand of an enemy, they deemed unavenged till then. After this their ghosts were enabled to go to an intermediate place, whence, after a time, they would land which pleased them best when on earth. They performed this religious duty with great ceremony, attended by a long train of rejoicing women, chanting their grateful songs of triumph to Yohewah. They sometimes danced for three days and nights, and then a day was fixed for crowning the warriors. On the wished-for day the warriors wore deer skin moccasins painted red, their bodies were annointed with bears' oil, an otter skin was tied around each leg. long collars of white feathers hung from their necks, and their faces were painted in the various bues of the rainbow. Then two of the oldest sachems came forth, bearing as many white wands and crowns as there were warriors to be crowned. After exhorting all to greater deeds of bravery in the Lture, one of the chiefs called three times with a foud voice the new name by which one of the warriors was to be known in the future, at the same time holding up the crown and wand. He that was called gladly answered, and after running three times around the chiefs, the crown was placed on his head and the wand in his hand, when he returned whooping to his former place. In like manner the sacheme proceeded with the others, to the end of the triumphal ceremony. This custom bears a striking resemblance to the usages of the ancients on similar occasions. *The English version of the Hymn is: Alone, yet no alone am I, Though in this solitude so drear: I feel my Saviour always nigh, He comes my dreary haurs to cheer; I'm with him, and he with me,

'm with him, and ac Thus I cannot solitary be.

ARRESTED. Three or four weeks ago some person broke through the wall of the smoke house of Judge Hepburn, and carried off a number of hams and shoulders-twelve pieces in all-and no clew was obtained to the thief until last week, when Geo. Magill (a colored man) and his wife had a little domestic difficulty, during which she charged her husband, in presence of several others, with having stolen Judge Hepburn's meat and not having brought any of it home. Magill was arrested by Constable Sauno and lodged in "Fort Foreman."

The report says that many persons make it a business to be present at these monthly meetings " for no other purpose than to get a good meal at the public expense."

DRUMMERS.—City merchants are pondering the question -are Drummers profitable? Over $50,000,000 are expended annually by New York merchants alone to keep up the system of drumming Who pays for all this? Not the city merchant, for he makes it off his custom ers. Some body pays the expense though. The country merchants would find re lief in the abandonment of the system Hotel keepers and a few livery men have no objection to its continuance. Liberality in advertising in country newspa pers, and sending out occasional price lists by city merchants would be less expensive, and as a general thing answer every purpose of the drummer, and be less annoying to country merchants. A DISTRESSING accident occurred at Peach Bottom; Lancaster county, on Thursday last, in a small smithshop at the slate quarries of Jeremiah Brown David Williams, the smith, was repairing a drill for one of the workman in the quarries, when another workmen brought into the shop a keg containing about ten pounds of blasting powder, which he set down beside a keg of water, upon which the other workman was sitting. Mr. Williams intended to plunge the heated drill into the keg of water for the purpos of tempering it, but mistook the powder keg for it, and into it he plunged the iron. A terrible explosion ensued, tearing out the end of the shop, destroying the sight of both Mr. William's eyes, and burning him so terribly over the head and body that at last accounts his life was despaired of. SEEKING DEATH IN THE SUSQUEHAN NA .- In the county prison is now young female, who at midnight on Wednesday was brought into the mayor's office with a haggard expression and dripping wet dress. A little beforé twelve o'clock she had been wandering along the banks of the river, and her move ments arousing suspicion, she was watched. In the course of a few minutes she rushed into the Susquehanna a short distance below the railroad bridge, but before she could accomplish her destruction by drowning she was rescued by a gentleman. He conducted her to the mayor's office, whence she was removed to the prison to have the proper care be stowed on her. According to her statement her name is Sarah Best and residence Lock Haven. Although yery reticent she said that she had been em ployed in a dining room at one of the hotels at Lock Haven, and while there formed the acquaintance of a former resident of Mechanicsburg, Cumberland Co. who soon accomplished her ruin. Stung to the quick by her condition she sought the destroyer of her virtue, a few days ago, supposing him to be at Mechanicsburg, but not finding him there she came to this city and attempted to commit suicide to hide her shame. Her mind seems somewhat deranged, but it is thought she will regain her senses fully

THE ECLECTIC MAGAZINE.-The Eclectic for May is out, and certainly none of the Magazines of the month can compare to t in the number of eminent names that ontribute to its contents. In looking lown the list we find those of Mazzini. Charles Kingsley, Professor Seely (Author of "Ecce riomo"), Robert Browning, W. B. Carpenter, F. R. S., and James Greenwood ("The Amateur Casual"); and the themes they treat are as vital and interesting as the authors.

Mazzini tells of "Italy and the Republic," and announces his own course in the present crisis of Italian history, in an article which is one of the ablest and most eloquent productions of his pen.-Canon Kingsley discusses "The Natural Theology of the Future," with special reference to the theological aspects of the . BE CAREFUL.—In these days, when tight hats, BECAREFUL—In these days, whon tight hats, hot air, and sedentary occupations, cause the hair to fall out, it is a matter of no little importance to know which of the hair preparations are of any value. The majority, as has been frequently proved by the first dermatologists, or hair-doctors, possess little or no merit, Such being the fact, it is consoling to those who are afflicted to know there is really one good article, which is recommended and used by the first medical authority, and has stood every test, many years. This preparation is HALL'S many years. This preparation is HALL'S VEGETABLE SIGILIAN HAIR RENEWER a truly scientific compound, which is unques-tionably the best prepartion of the kind now before the American public, It will restore to gray hair its original color cleanse the head roughly, cure all eruption of the scalp; and will always restore the hair so long as any germs remain, as they aimost invariably do, until (xtreme old age has destroyed the roots.
