Agricultural.

WHAT IS SCIENCE IN FARMING? It is not unusual-perhaps it is not unnatural-for one who has been only a "practical" farmer all his life, to dis courage the idea that science can be of assistance to him, and to doubt its value. Perhaps his objection would be less if he appreciated the exact meaning of the word. Webster gives it four definitions: "(1.) Knowledge; penetrating and comprehensive information, skill, expertness, and the like. (2.) The comprehension and understanding of truth or facts. (3.) Truth ascertained; that which is known. (4.) Knowledge duly arranged, and referred to general truths or principles on which it is founded and from which it is derived." Now, surely no farmer will deny the value of knowledge-a knowledge of his own business. He must know how and when to perform the various operations of the farm, and if he knows also the reasons why they are necessary, he will be better able to exercise a sound judgment concernning them. The more penetrating and comprehensive his knowledge, and the greater his skill and expertness, the more cheaply and the more effectively will his work be done. The more comprehension and understanding of the truths on which his success depends, and of the facts which daily arise in his management of his business, the better farmer will he be. Truth ascertained, that which is known, is "Book Farming"-that is to say, the knowledge that we get from books and agricultural papers is nothing more nor less than the recorded knowl edge (not the fancies) of other people. It is an important item of the science of farming, that seed, in order to germinate and produce a crop, must be so put in the soil as to satisfy the conditions of growth. This much every far mer knows, and to this extent has be acquired a scientific understanding of his business. The knowledge is of absolute value to him and to every other farmer, and its value would not be at all lessened if he were to write a communication to an editor, informing him and his readers of it. If another person were to write that because the germinating plant comes up in a certain way therefore all farmers ought to plant their grass seed with their fingers always putting the right end uppermost this would be neither book farming nor science, nor anything else; but mere fancy, and a fancy of which every farmer would see the folly.

Now, generations of men have been busy in investigating; mainly in the field, everything connected with the operations of practical agriculture .-Little by little they have acquired knowledge, which knowledge has been duly arranged, and so much of it as is well understood has been referred to the general truths and principles on which it founded, and from which it is derived. The knowledge itself is due mainly to the experience of working farmers; and chemits and others, who have made general truths and princi ples the subject of careful study, have classified and arranged it, and given it the form that is generally understood by the word "science." No error, no unproved theory, none of the fancies of those who write from imagination rather than from experience; is to be called either Science or Book-Farming, and it is unfortunate, that so much of our agricultural writing has been done by men who lack experience on the farm. It has given rise to the doubt referred to, and discouraged many of our best and most intelligent working men from seeking knowledge, where it is best to be found, in the recorded experience of those who have gone before them. The real truth of the matter is that in decrying science farmers decry knowledge, and a natural deduction from their reasoning would lead them to withdraw from the management of their ferms, because they have some knowledge, and give it over to men who have none whatever. If knowledge is essential, and if, as we are told and believe, "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing," then the more knowledge we get, the better our chan es will be. Follow no false lights but let the lamp of true knowledge lead wherever it will .- American Agricultu-

A CHEAP ICE HOUSE.—These frosty nights remind us that the ice crop for the warm weather for 1872 is about beng gathered, and plans for ice-houses are in demand. Any builder or architect can design and put up an claborate ice-house which may or may not preserve the ice entrusted to it keeping; but a cheap, make shift icehouse, which will serve a temporary until a better one can be erected, is greatly to be desired. We know from experience that a very simple structure will serve every purpose, and the fol-lowing directions, which we clip from the Country Gentleman, seem to meet the required conditions as any we have seen: "Throw down old rails or poles on a piece of ground sufficiently inclined to carry off water, fill the crevices between the poles with sawdust, cover with old boards slabs or barks-ge from the saw-mill a few loads of slabs, take four say twelve feet long, notch the corners, like a log house, set them on the platform, and you have a crib about ten and a half feet square by the width of the slab deep; fill this crib with sawdust and pack it down hard. Cut your ice so that it will pack close, and eight feet square; lay it on the sawdust, put on another crib of slabs and fill up and pack hard with sawdust all around, and so go on until you get up six or eight feet; then put 11 feet of sawdust on the top; over this put a shed roof of slabs-one end of the slabs nearly to the ice, raising the other three feet. If ice is all that is wanted, it will keep in this manner as well as in a varnished house. Let a farmer once get in the habit of keeping ice, and he will soon find a way to make something better than a crib to keep it in-and I think this cheap plan will be apt to get him started.

A Cough of recent date may be frequently cured by breathing a warm, moist air for a few hours, and for a cough of long standing, the selection of an appropriate climate is often the best means of cure.
