

ROMEO.
Tunneling a Live Elephant With Red-hot Crowbars—The Old Warrior Shoombos.

The most colossal surgical operation ever performed upon a living creature, was witnessed by a select few in this city on yesterday morning. Everything about the affair was of a most extraordinary scale, as the subject himself is the largest of his kind and he was in this country. Of course he was in the city.

Romeo is getting old—his flesh is slow to heal—and a lack of knowledge how to treat elephantine sores, coupled with many misplaced remedies, soon placed the old hero in a sad plight. The wounds festered, increased, but became worse, until now his legs resemble the catkins of Rome, being more recalcitrant of cure. At this juncture, the surgeons, who were assembled, were of the opinion that the only way to save the animal was to amputate his legs. The operation was performed with a skill and precision that the animal was alive and able to stand on his legs.

After a full hour spent in SLASHING, GOADING AND SCORPING, during which the poor beast was rid of fifteen or twenty pounds of putrid matter and flesh, and a pound or two of bone, the surgeons concluded that sufficient for a day might be the evil thereof, and decided from that part of the operation to enter upon another ten-fold more painful and hazardous.

CAUTERIZATION.

While the excavations had been progressing, men were busy at the furnace heating huge soldering irons, several inches in diameter, to a white heat, to remove the rot from the flesh. When they were approached with the first glowing iron, a shiver ran through his frame, and he was disposed to resent any further aggression, but being convinced by the pointed arguments of his keeper that it was all for his good, he issued another loud wailing which was echoed from every cage, and straightened his trunk, and embraced himself for further martyrdom.

THE RED HOT IRON

was running into tunnel No. 1, the length of about a foot, and a hissing sound, followed by dense clouds of steam and other intolerable stench, issues from the opening. The poor brute shook like an aspen; made a slight effort to rise to resistance, but soon settled into quietness again. Another red-hot iron was introduced, again there was a quiver of the whole frame, but this time he only drew up his back and changed his position a trifle.

THE BLOOD

now began to flow from the caverns in copious supplies, a sight that made all the animals of the cat species desperate, and howls, yells, leopards, hyenas, panthers, tigers, leopards, and other beasts of the infernal herd, whose cages formed a circle about the martyr joined in low growls, which were intended to roar and shrieks, as the fumes of the burning flesh filled their nostrils.

When the dirt and the noise were somewhat lessened, the operation was proceeded with, and during the two following hours about thirty red-hot irons were thrust into the poor brute's carcass. When the surgeons finally abated, it was not because they believed that the animal had died, but because the operation seemed such dimensions that the two heavy iron rods were too small to be further effective. Besides, Romeo was evidently weakening, and getting a little "grungy" from loss of blood.

The openings were liberally washed with lotions, and afterwards carefully bound up.

The fellow has always displayed a strong predilection for candy and other nice things. After the operation, a nice bit of sugar was proffered to him, but he declined it with a solemn shake of the head.

When the animal's naturally vicious temper is taken into consideration his NOBLE BEHAVIOR during the painful operations can only be accounted for on the hypothesis that, with an elephant's proverbial sagacity, and the fact that he was convinced that it would redound to his good. Otherwise he would have strewn his tormentors about like "the leaves of the strand," and might, controlled by plus inspiration, have knelt on one or two.

[Romeo subsequently died from the effects of his disease, and his treatment, as announced in our issue of the 10th ult.]

"Fire baby is sick, my dear."
"Well, give it castor oil. Dennis, bring me the castor oil."
"It's all gone, sir—died a drop is left."
"Gone! why we have not yet opened the bottle!"

"Sure you have used it every day, and I have seen you use it myself upon your child."
"Why, you scoundrel! you don't mean to say that I've been using castor oil every day during the last season?"
"Sure you have, sir."
"Did you not see the bottle was labeled 'Castor Oil'?"
"Sure and I did, sir; and didn't I put it in the castor every day?"

At a recent marriage, the bride was the daughter of a sea captain. The old salt participated in the ceremony by giving away the bride, and then addressed the bridegroom.

"There, youngster, take her, you are welcome to the hull, spare and biscuits, but don't let me hear you mutiny and rigging."
"Mr. Jones, don't you think that marriage is a means of grace?"
"Certainly, madam; anything is a means of grace that breaks up pride and leads to repentance."
Scene closes with a mop-handle.

STOVES,
An array of MEDICAL VALENT.

With this purpose in view, Mr. Foreman called upon Dr. H. W. Boyd, professor of surgery and anatomy of the Chicago Medical College, who has had considerable experience in elephantine surgery. Under the direction of Prof. Boyd, Dr. Waters, out-gated, tunnelled and chiseled into the poor beast, each time cutting away or digging out a pound or two of putrid flesh, and each time the knife or other tools was withdrawn the blood flowed copiously from it. Like a red hot iron, the doctor only proposed to the animal, feeling his way to the arteries. Soon he laid bare a member, and then entered upon a task that sickened the stoutest saw-benches present.

Tunneling his way along by means of scrapers and chisels, his arm would enter sound flesh was touched. It was not long before the explorer discovered that what would bore or flesh there wasn't Romeo's forelegs wasn't speaking about, and the only wonder was that the animal was alive and able to stand on his legs.

After a full hour spent in SLASHING, GOADING AND SCORPING, during which the poor beast was rid of fifteen or twenty pounds of putrid matter and flesh, and a pound or two of bone, the surgeons concluded that sufficient for a day might be the evil thereof, and decided from that part of the operation to enter upon another ten-fold more painful and hazardous.
