Horace Greele President actives. Horace Greater has promised that, it elected, he will be the President of the people, and not of a party, and he is the man to keep his word. The people have brought their political parties together that they might the more effectually break up the degreenes party dynastic at the patient might the more enertually break up the dangerous party dynasty at the nation-al capital. It was so entrenched in power as to defy dislodgement in any other way. So that this is a fight of people against power, and with hard work the people must win. The slogan of reform is already heard in the camp of the opology and suppose of the spoilers and usurpers. The alarmed army of officeholders hear the tramp of the coming conquerors and tremble. The music of their bands is borne to their ears on every warning breeze. The inscriptions on their ban-ners may be read afar off. From state to state the hurrah rolls on for the cause of reform, and its echoes will reverber-ate like thunder before November in in the ears of the beleagured and doomed administration camp.
