His speech was loudly applauded.
The letter of Mr. O'Conor was referred.

Mr. Moreau, of Indiama, combated the resolution, urglag that the strong and emphatic declarations in Mr. O'Conor's letter, that he could not serve, was a sufficient warning to this body not to nominate him. An excited member exclaimed: "Mr. Speaker, if you adjourn this convention without making a nomination you stand discreased and contemptible before the disgraced and contemptible before the world."

The speaker said: "Yes sir, yes sir, you are right."

A member from Indiana, Mr. Mor-reau stated that the convention having yielded to the wishes of New York, and given the nomination to Mr. O'Conor, in their assurance that he would accept, and it being refused and hurled back into their faces, he now called upon them to nominate some one of the hun-dreds of good men able and willing to earry the banner on to victory, men who were not afraid of the brickbats of a party campaign, and in an impressioned speech eulogized, and proceeded to nominate the chairman, Hon.
