PAID LOCALS.—The following sensible rticle we take from one of our exchanges, and heartily endorse every line it contains. It is true to the letter, and should be carefully read, especially by those who are everlastingly bothering the printer for gratuitous locale: '

"There seems to be a good deal of mis-onception in regard to the use of the local columns of newspapers as advertising agencies. The proprietor of a newspaper depends largely on the profits of his advertising columns for support. The subscription rarely pays the cost of the paper. The advertising columns constitute the paper. paper. The advertising columns compti-tute the publisher's stock in trade—the odity which he sells to the pub at slipulated prices—just as the merchant at slipulated prices—just as the merchant sells his goods. And yet publishers are constantly asked to insert grauitously oleals, notices and advertisements in aid of money-making enterprises. With just much propriety might the merchant.

All loal news of general interest, we are lad to publish; but we sell the right of dvertising private business, and at fixed prices—whether this advertising be in id of lectures, concerts, exhibitions, or or lectures, concerts, exploitions, or hary business enterprise. The fact the enterprise has a religious or gratifying to the United States agents of moral hearing, does not give it claim, for the company, we have no doubt they gratuitous advertising, any more than it does on the merchant or mechanic for a donation of his goods or products. If we see fit to contribute to these enterpolises we product that they have no a still more favorable position in prises, we prefer to do it as other people do—in money—demanding pay for that which we sell. There is a question of sound morals as well as sound business in all this, which will be approved by all this.

We learn from the Committee! having the matter in charge, that the course tickets have been pretty well taken up, and but a few remain unsold: We advise persons wishing comfortable seats for the course, to secure them at once, or they will be out. This enterprise should recommend itself to every property-holder in our borough. Our Fire Department is a volunteer one, and this is a very commendable way of coming before the public for encouragement. We owe much to our fire department—more especially during the cold, dreary winter months-for their services in case of the flery element visiting our property.

Fire.—At an early hour (about ten o'clock) on Mouday night last, a fire broke out in the large stable belonging to Mr. Robert Given, immediately in the rear of his fine residence and banking house, West High street. Our firemen, withtheir three finesteamers, were soon on hand, and managed the fire remarkably well by confining it to the stable along. The stable being brick with a tin roof, the fire was entirely in the inside. The

The existence of the liquor traffic as it is now carried on in this country, is at war with every principle of government, and destructive to the interests of every branch of industry, as well as an enemy to the peace and happiness of society.— "Of all the observed laws enacted in an-cient and modern times," says Neal Dow, "this is the most absurd and wicked to "this is the most absurd, and wicked to license the traffic in intoxicating liquors." It is a violation of common nature and Divine law. It declares that to be right which God has declared to be wrong. It tends to destroy the very basis on which society is organized. Society is organized on the principle of mutual benefit and benevolence. The employment of a man in lawful traffic may be pursued without violating the right or happiness of others. Nay, it will not only infringe upon the rights of others, but it will benefit them by promoting the interests of the whole. He supports himself and family, and at the same time contributes to the welfare of others by promoting a healthful exchange of various commodities and of various natures. It is on this principle that the orvarious commodities and of various natures. It is on this principle that the organization of society exists. The manufacturer, the merchant, the mechanic, the agriculturist, the laborer, while persuing their several callings, are not only thereby supporting themselves and families, but are a mutual benefit to each other. If one prepare all shore in his other. If one prospers, all share in his presperity. If one suffers, all sympathize to an extent. But the traffic in intoxicating liquors as a drink, is a violation of this benevolent arrangement. It tends to benefit the trafficker only. Nay, it tends to undermine the whole. The man who drinks is not the recovery. it tends to undermine the whole. The man who drinks is not the man to support the farmer, the merchant or the manufacturer. He supports the grogseller, while he and his children go ragged and hungry. Can such a traffic be right? Moreover, it renders no equivalent to the persons who support it. Where a man receives the results of other's industry, practice demands that he return an equivalent that which will be of corresponding value. In every be of corresponding value. In every right employment this principle is observed. The agriculturist receives in exchauge for the fruits of his farm the traffic of the merchant, the production of their lands. He receives that which will be of early value to him and thus be of equal value to him, and thus mu-tual interest is advanced. But does the traffic in intoxicating liquor do this? It receives the hard earnings of laboring man and what does it give in exchange? Does it give that which will make him hanniar wiser, richer a bafter husband happier, wiser, richer, a better husband, ather, citizen? None of these things and gives that which will madden his brain, drown on his conscience, rob him of his manhood, destroy his property, full him with botherne diverse ord him to an untimely grave and drunkard's hell, white his poor wife and negled ted children are thrown as wrecks society or are compelled to drag out a miserable existence in penitentiaries or almshouses. Can this be right? Will the act of a corrupt legislature de-daring it legal to traffic in this abom-mable stuff make right what the compined interests of the whole body politic declare to be wrong? And now my friends this question is soon to be hrown into your hands for a solution. What answer will you give at the polls next spring? We shall see.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Disaster.

MIFFLIN, PA., Dec. 6.-The correct list of the killed by the disaster to the Cincinnati Express on the Pennsylvahia railroad, near this place, about ten o'clock last night, comprises Matthew Knowles and J. W. Bacon, of Chicago; W. W. Dentz, wife and child. Mr ERPOOL.—The annual meeting of the Dontz was an employee of Congress, and shareholders of the Royal Insurance was from Michigan. All the bodies were removed from the wreck. About five persons were injured. One ladv was taken from the debrie very severely injured, and a train hand was hurt badly by a stove falling on him. Coroner Ioseph Meddah had a jury empanneled. and is now holding an inquest. The injured were taken away, by the railroad officials. The men are still clearing away the debris on the side track, as it s thought by the porter of the car that another person is buried.

HARRISBURG, Dec. 6 .- There were two sections of the Cincinnati Express east. The engine of the first train was making | Henderson & Hays, steam badly when about one mile west of Mifflin. The near car of first train was run into by the second section knocking the rear car on to the bumpe and haif way through the car immediately in front, killing the persons at ready named. It is supposed they were killed instantly, as the bodies were cold when extricated. Rumor says that there is at least one body in the debris, but there is no certainty of this. Five per sons were injured slightly, all of whom went on their journey on the same train The first section was behind time, and was expected to reach here half an hour late. The second section, which ran in to the first, was to be one hour behind it. Among the wounded are Thomas M Sayre and wife, of Elizabethtown, N. J.
