THOUGHTS.

BY CHAS. HAYTTA.

As year on year roll slowly by

And mingle with the past,

I give a smile, but not a sigh,

Thank God! his gone all that.

On returning home, I discovered the miscreant had fled, and in a short time he actually applied for a divorce. Of course he could not gain it, there was not a shadow of chance.

Oh, dear, oh, dear! exclaims Mr. Manly, I fear he is deranged! I hope he will not be allowed to remain at large; I shall not sleep a wink at night until I know he is confined. Oh, Miss East, will not you see he does not go about unless strictly guarded? I shall die, I am certain, were I to meet him in the street.

"My sweet Mr. Manly," replies the lady, with a look of inexpressible tenderness, "do not fear, I shall see that you are not troubled. Mrs. Rampant, the agent of the police, shall be informed of the matter—I am sure you can trust me."

"Yes, ma'am, I will rely on you, as I have all—here he checks himself! blushing deeply.

"What pleasure I receive on hearing you say so, and those beautiful downcast eyes tell more I hope, than your rosebud mouth can utter."

"Now Miss East," cries the gentleman, at the same time tapping her with his fan, "you are beginning your flatteries. What a bad, naughty, hateful creature you are—I do protest," he adds with an enchanting lip, "that you are the most perfect flirt. I know how you trifle with us gentlemen."

"Trifle with you Mr. Manly," the lady burst forth, going down on her knees. "Is not my whole life bound up in you—will you not smile on me with delight, when I confess I adore you with all the power of a strong womanly nature—that I will protect you through life's journey, and you shall desire no firmer arm to lean upon and look to for support. Oh, my, my better angel, that you will be mine!"

"Really Miss East—do not spare me—I am not calm just now—some other time I am very young—some other time—oh—oh—I am so situated—"

"I am so situated—" desire that the offense might not be repeated; but he behaved in a most unmanly way, said he had borne tyranny long enough, and would have the wrongs men possessed in the last century (Did you ever hear anything like it?)

When he could not be pacified his wife quietly turned the key of his boudoir, and leaving order with the servants at what hour to have dinner, went out to her business.—

On returning home, she discovered the miscreant had fled, and in a short time he actually applied for a divorce. Of course he could not gain it, there was not a shadow of chance.
