A PENNSYLVANIA INDEPLNDENT JOURNAL.

COLUMBIA, Pa. SATURDAY, NOV. 29, 1856.

U. S. SENATOR .- The election of United States Senator from this state will take place on the second Tuesday of January next, the 13th. This will be in accordance with the act of January 4, 1856, which repealed the act of 1853. We have heard the names of several distinguished Democrats mentioned in connection with this office. Of the number we know none more deserving, or by his past political course more popular with his own party and less obnoxious to the opposition than the Hon. Wm. Strong, of Reading. We do not know that he would accept a nomination of the kind but are firmly convinced that he would fill the position better that any one at present in the field. As a member of the House of Representatives his course was exceedingly straight. He performed his duty modestly, honorably, and with full purpose of heart. There is not a single error ever noticed in his reports as chairman of one of the most important committees of that body, just because all his actions were of that quiet character-unoffending, honest, sincere and earnest-which distinguish the true lover of his country. We, although "neutral in polities," should rejoice if he would consent to a trial for nomination, and Pennsylvania, a Commonwealth we ardently love, would be greatly benefitted by his election as Senator. We believe him to be one of the few who hold the country first and foremost, and one who would at all times make sacrifices for its benefits. Personally we differ in politics, but for all of that, we do not hesitate to render him justice. The Democrats must elect a Senator and we desire to see the best man in their party elected to fill that important position.

Greene, former editor of that paper, had his overcoat stolen from his residence, a few days ago, and two evenings before that, his thanksgiving turkey and some chickens also diappeared from his premises. We sympa-thize with Bro. Greene in his losses; for who ever heard of an editor having two coats, or a turkey either, unless some considerate person had bestowed one upon him. The erpetrator of such fowlery is past all reclamation, for

He who steals a Printers turkey, Must have a conscience woful murky; And he who steals a Printer's coat. Descrives a rope around his throat; But it caps the climax of all that's mean, To steal a coat from STEPHEN GREENE T. C. Star.

To which the Editor of the Spy would add, Turkeys are uncommon nice, And pal-a-table, without spice;

And use up his appetite after he has delved into ther for a long time, or for a considerable while. A turkey fed on corn, or fixins, Or hominy, equals any chickens. (Does that rhyme?)

They kinder make a printer smile.

But seriously—to rob a printer's coop,
Is lower than any decent individual in ancient times would have possibly a stoop(t)o. Nevertheless, the ex-editor expresses

His regret that among the lesses, (or losses,) His turkey is among the goners, A victim to the sad and degenerate spirit of the times

We observe the following notice of two gentlemen formerly of this vicinity, in the Daily Minnesotian, published at Saint Paul. It will gratify their numerous friends to know that they are esteemed properly in the West and we wish for them a continuance of public favor. New Commission House .- Messrs. Mehaf-

Simpson, Esq., on the Lower Levee, and have "opened up" in the commission and forwarding business. They are gentlemen have facilities for carrying on business excelled by no other house in the city. Dr Mehaffey has occupied a position at Washington where he has had opportunities of rendering many acts of kindness to Minnesota and Minnesotians, and he is a gentleman who has always improved them. We welcome him among us as a resident.

Graham's Tilustrated Mayazine, the 50th volume of which will commence with the January number, is sufficiently known to all the literary lovers in this country as one of the best magazines published. It deserves an extensive circulation, as nothing three young matter they puffed most their mouths, at which they puffed most that capital, taste or enterprise can accomplish will be wanting to make it more than over 300 patterns for needlework, &c.

PLEASANT NIGHTS AT HOME.

Now that the long winter nights are fas upon us, we know of no entertainment which is so pleasant and profitable as that which may be derived from employing them in reading works of our standard authors, or current literature of the day. How any one can pass evenings in listless idleness or in sauntering the time away along the streets or in other people's places of business, and forego the high enjoyments of reading, we are unable to understand. We commend the following, from the Philadelphia Sun, to our readers: A Good Book BY THE FIRE .- A good book by a warm fire, of a cold night, is the pleasantest thing in the world. Shut the door close the blinds, light the gas and hand down the dear old volume. There is no dust on it you may be sure. The vivacity of its pages would be enough of itself to an old gentleman of about 80 years, happen brush away the cobwebs. That the housewife knows very well, and she never touches it. Now the wind howls through the bleak streets. The boisterous elements without enhance the genial glow within. Sleigh bells are ringing away for dear life. Dark forms flit by, muffled in thick wollen fabrics. Luminous noses abound; aye, and aqueous, too. Ears stick out behind the collars of great coats like slices of frozen beets. The tor, immediately ordered an extra amount young gentleman who calls nightly over the of steam and actually beat the old man, way, is on the step. What he will say when who, it is unnecessary to add, was much ushered in, nobody but his adorable will ever know. Some of the passers by are going to the show, some to the lecture, and some to the wedding feast, perhaps: but these things attractive as they are, cannot allure the reader from his cosy retreat. Now he has Goldsmith in his hands. Poor Oliver, what a world of observation is there in his pages, and set out withal with such fascinating power. How ludicrous, and yet how amiable in the story of his ensconsing himself in the feathers of his bed, with his head sticking out, that he might give the warmth of his blankets to a beggar! But our reader has other books. Take a peep into his book has not, of course, forgotten to provide himself with Irving, and Prescott, and Bryant and Halleck. Nor are the placid names of the antique wanting. Into that little room converge the intellect, and heroism, and humanity, and humor, and whatsoever is noble that have gone away. It is no wonder then procured a horse and was ahead of the train that this lover of books should keep to his room. And like him, dear reader, it would so that when fatigued with toil, or disgusted

Will the editor of the Spy oblige my sex and myself, by urging upon the fathers who have the comfort of the children of the town at heart, the immediate necessity of repair ing the street crossings. I consider them altogether out of order, and the authorities guilty of neglect of duty. The bridges over the gutters in several places are not fit to walk over, while at other points they have been washed away or broken up. As the gutters are both wide and deep, it is exceedingly difficult to cross in wet or muddy weather, and any lady attempting it must incur the risk of wet feet and consequently bad health. But the authorities with their thick boots and independent strut, don't care; they are exceedingly facetious tionists in the country and we can (having thoroughly entitled to public confidence, and in their remarks upon the subject, and desirous of getting along themselves, careless of fidence to these who delight in spending a Bills Discounted, the comfort of those whom they should pro-tect. A RACE .-- A gentleman on a train of cars -proceeding in a certain direction from this place-started, one day last week, for his destination, distance 12 miles. Two hours were occupied in going 7 miles, when the passenger, who is addicted to hurry, offered the conductor that if his fare was returned he would beat the train to Y-, (5 miles further.) The gentlemanly conductor complied and our hero at once got out. Upon the arrival of the train at Y---, he was the first to welcome it. By what means he had "made time," deponent sayeth not-sufficient that he could not have had one of M'Mahon's 2:241's, as the line of cars named is celebrated for rapid travelling.

As an instance in proof, we will mention that last winter, during the snowed-up time, ed to be at a crossing on the road as the cars came along. The benevolent conductor and one, by the way, fully entitled to the high popularity he enjoys, kindly stopped his train and asked the old man, "if he was going to Y .- if so, to jump in." The aged man with many thanks replied that he was "in a hurry to get to Y .--- " and preferred walking. It is said our friend, the conducchagrined.

These items were communicated by our special reporter upon the positive assurance of respectable authors and we give them, therefore, unhesitatingly, for their inestimable worth. If future "rapid travelling" should take place on this road we hope to be duly notified.

The time occupied in going from this place to the aforesaid Y-, is usually three hours; the distance, as we have stated before, being 12 miles.
