two or three words were interchanged on that occasion. At Reading, the Marlbo-could expect to be indulged in this way every time you come to a dark place; besides, it is not the thing. Consider, two married people; no such phenomenon, I assure you, took place. No scream issued in hopeless rivalry of the engine-this time.

A Lucky Mason.

There was once upon a time a poor mason or baicklayer in Granada, who kept all the Saints' days and holidays, and Saint Monday in the bargain, and yet with all this devotion he grew poorer and poorer, and could scarcely earn bread for his numerous family. One night he was aroused from his first sleep by a knocking at the door. He opened it and beheld before him a tall, meagre, cadaverous looking priest.

"Hark ye, honest friend," said the stranger, "I have observed that you are a good Christian and one to be trusted-will you undertake a job this very night?"

"Willingly, if I may expect to be paid?" "That you shall; but you must suffer yourself to be blindfolded."

To this the mason had no objection; 20 being hood-winked, he was led by the priest through various lanes and winding passages, until they stopped before the portal of a house. The priest then applied a key, turned a creaking lock, and opened what sounded like a ponderous door. They entered, the door was closed and bolted, and the mason was conducted through an echoing corridor, and a spacious hall, to the interior of the building. Here the bandage was removed from his eyes, and he found himself in a parlor or court, dimly lighted by a single lamp. In the centre was a dry basin of an old Moorish fountain, under which the priest requested him to form a small vanit, bricks and mortar being at hand for the purpose. He accordingly worked all night, but without finishing the jub. Just before daybreak the priest put a piece of gold into his hand, and, having blindfolded him, conducted him back to his dwelling.

"Are you willing," he said, "to return and complete your work?"

"Oladly, Senor Padre-provided I am so well paid."

He did so, and the vault was completed. "Now," said the priest, "you must help me to bring forth three bodies that are to be buried in this vault."

The mason's hair raised on end at these words; he followed the priest with trembling steps to a retired chamber of the mansion, expecting to behold some ghastly spectacle of death, but was relieved upon perceiving threes or four portly jars atanding in one corner, They were evidently full of money, and it was with great labor that he and the priest carried them forth and consigned them to the tomb. The vault was then closed, the pavement replaced, and all traces of the work obliterated. The mason was again hood-winked and led forth by a route different from that by which he had handkerchief. Captain Dolignan fell on it ued the Major, "but unfortunately he de-like a tiger, and returned it like a lamb; erved to lose it." At this the blood mounted to the young to his daughter.
