the effect of removing every chance of a spontaneous healing, and accelerating death. The folly of this course has at last been recognised by the profession, and the opposite plan is now pursued. It is by combining a local and a general treatement that medicated inhalation is so successful; it operates directly on the seat of disease, and removes the local affection, while the general treatment puts the system at large in such a state that the blood is so improved as no longer to deposit fresh tubercle. In this
