"But before we walt for that we'll take some steps of our own," cried lanthe. "Some safe hiding-place must be found."

Alarie was upon the point of speaking when a loud knocking was heard without, and a voice demanded entrance, in the name of the king.

"Fly! fly!" cried Ianthe, seizing her lover by the arm.

"Hold," spoke Bellerus, who became calm in the presence of this necessity. But Alaric made no reply. At that mo ment a weighty thought was upon him, and before he could call his senses back for an answer he was hurried out into the street. The officer walked by his side, while one of the soldiers led the way, and the other two fell in behind.

A variety of thoughts occupied Alarie's mind as he passed on through the narrow. dimly lighted-streets. He remembered how he had seen his father out down, and how his brother had been butchere I, and the same bloody tyrant who had done it had now sent for him. Is it a wonder that, with all his bravery, the youth felt a cold chill creeping about his heart as he approached the lair of the remorseless monarch? CHAPTER III.

DARKNESS AND DOOM.

Pyrrho, king of Sicily, sat upon his throne of gold and precious stones, and about him were a few of the hardened, cruel, subservi-

A contemptuous look overspread the outh's face as he thus found a monarch so features of the tyrant who had slain his loved kindred, an expression of deadly hate leaned against it for support, for there was swept over his noble brow, and a keen fire burned in his dark eve.

"Ye gods!" gasped the king, as he eaught a full view of the youth's face, with He knew the character of the monarch this deep expression from the soul upon it, and that no evil would be too evil for him. " what have we here? Come no nearer! guard him well! Who art thou?"

"Why hast thou returned now?" "To see the land of my birth."

"Who came with thee?" "I landed alone upon these shores, your

"Yes." "And lives with the artisan Bellerus?"

"I went there to seek her!"

"And there you found her?"

"I heard of her there."

"Answerme!" cried the king, in a voice of rage. "By the sacred crown of Jupiter, thou had-t better bite off thine own head than answer me again as thou hast done "We came not to answer questions-only, Who is the maiden thou hast come to seek?" Alaric hesitatel ere he replied to this.

He remembered the warning he had re-"Our gracious monorch will evidently see coived from Bellerus, and he began to feel you to-night," interpreed Bellerus, who that he had been too rash in his speech. saw the flash of indigaction in Alarie's eye, But he had no choice now. If he refused dwelling of the mason, and thus matters be only made worse.

"She is the daughter of Bellerus," he finally said.

The monarch gazed into the youth's face for some moments without speaking. There was a lock of deadly meaning upon his hard Alaric put on his cap, and as they passed! features, and his fingers moved nervously out through the narrow passage Bellerus over his knees. At length he turned to his caamberlain, and said:

Alaric could not mistake the meaning of hese words. The look which accompanied them was a sufficient key to their import .-But he could do nothing now to help himself. He could only trust to circumstances as they should present themselves.

The king called one of his officers to his side and whispered something into his ear, and then turned once more to the youth.

"It is waving late now, and we all have need of rest," he said; "so thou shalt be conducted to a place of safety unt; the morrow."

"But, sire," interposed our hero, "why should you keep me here to-night? I car be found when you want me." "We are not sure of that. But it is ou hero, and placed his hand upon his arm.

"Come," he said.

Alaric started as he heard the tones of The word was not spoken as speaks one who leads a guest to a quiet chamber.

"Go with him," spoke the king. Alaric turned, and was led away. In an ante-room his conductor was joined by four in the terror which his cruelty inspired. dark, sinister-looking men, who had more the apperance of common ruffians than eized by both his arms, and hurried on through a vaulted passage to a dimly-lighted corridor. Presently the officer, who was Hippon, the jailer, stopped at a deep niche, where a guard was posted, and procured a torch, by the glaring light of which he led off once more.

On, through dark and narrow passagesand down, down, down, long and steep ways, the youth was led; and when his conductors finally stopped, Hippon opened a door of solid metal, which swung out from a jagged wall, and the prisoner was forced roughly in, and the massive door was closed. It was shut with a dull, heavy sound, the reverbations being drunk up by the solid walls as soon as they fell upon the air-and the prisoner was left in utter darkness. He closed his eyes, and then opened them again, to see if some glimmer might not be found fearful; but when he gazed full upon the to break the horrid gloom; but it was all in vain. He groped his way to the wall, and no seat save the floor.

The youth was not long in making up his mind that he had been doomed to death. He knew, also, how fear could make the tyrant more cruel than before, and to what deeds of darkness the fear-stricken usurper

It was a terrible thought, and for a while Marie was inclined to blame himself for what he had done; but when he came to reflect upon the transactions of the day, he could not see how the present result could have been avoided. It had flown from causes over which he could have exercised no control without the power of foreknowledge. He thought of Ianthe, and he wondered if he should ever see her again. The chances were against it, but he was not prepared to give up all hope. He had just started to grope his way around the slimy wall, when he heard the sound of footsteps without, and presently the moving of bolts fell upon his car. In a few moments more the door of his dungeon was opened, and three men entered one of them bearing a flaming torch. They were huge fellows, clad in sombre garbs, and each bore a naked sword in his hand. Alaric recognized those garbs, for he had seen them years before, and he knew that only the executioners wore them? The moment his eye rested upon the grim visitors, he knew that his doom had been spoken, and that the time for execution had come instinctively he placed his hand upon his hip, but there was no weapon there. He was all unarmed and seemingly powerless against the gigantic ruffians. The man who held the torch leaned it up against the wall where a projecting point of rock helped support it, and then the three approached the prisoner.

"How now," spoke Alaric." "What is your business here?"

vanced the workmen of death! There was no hope in his own strength of body and limb, for, unarmed as he was, the power opposed to him was unconquearable. So he leaned back against the recking wall, and shut the horrid monsters from his sight. The above is the commencement of Mr. Cobb's great story, which is now being published in the New York Ledger.
