Borrowed Franks .-- Of the man, frauds constantly practiced upon the revenue of perhaps, deserving of more pointed condemnation than the custom of late years so prevalent in this city of using borrowed franks to cover private correspondence. Many persons in Washington whose business connections are at a distance, are in the habit of procuring from persons entitled to the franking privilege regular suppliesdrove back to the high read, and got again of franked envelopes, under which their whole correspondence is conducted. It is true that, in some instances, the postagethus saved during the year amounts to no inconsiderable sum. But the loss of charneter through which this saving is accomplished, ought certainly to inspire some doubt as to its enonomy; for surely it cannot be pretended that the confession, made upon every letter illegally, franked; that its writer has defrauded the Government of the petty sum of three cents tends to inspire confidence in a man of business, or respect for a correspondent.

This matter has often been brought tothe notice of the Post Office Department; but the difficulty of procuring the necessary proof has, in most cases, prevented action upon the part of the authorities. We have been informed, however, that stringent measures will be taken in all cases where such offenses can, by any possibility, be
