WE are told that he who neglects to provide for his hose-choid is "worse than the heathen." There is no doubt of it. When an health the provident man will provide for his charge-and whits that health senting the provident man will provide for his charge-and whits that health senting the provident of the charge and whits that health senting the near that the providence should prepare for soluce in the dark day, for the nour when the sympathy of friends is assumiding brass. This can be done by Lafe Insurance, Every man owes this daily to his family. The uncertainty of the is a constant lesson which tenches the fact that he who to-day walks in the pride of manhood, may half to-morrow, and the plans by which riches and honort were to have been brought to the loved ones, vanish as the morring mists. Let every man in health insure to his family the comfort of knowing that should be be called from them the wolf may be kept from the door.
