The Little Redcaps of Kerleau.

A BRETON TALE.

In a corner of the courtyard of the old Castle of Kerleau may be seen the crumbling stone statue of a peasant, which has stood there for many ages.

In the days when good Christians reached was forced to exercise his wits to draw them and I'll meet you in the yard." into his snares; he was therefore much more has no need to come to us, as we of our own accord go to him.) But whatever of forethought he might exercise, and whatever pains the evil spirit might take, his most carefully prepared plots would sometimes fail, even when brought to bear upon the simple ones.

There was then at that time, in the commune of Eleven, a poor peasant named Laucent; he was a widower, and had no other and he leaned upon his fork in despair. possession in the world than a beautiful though the love of money was then less nothing! Do you understand?" prevalent than it is now, no one envied the good man his treasure, and none of the parish, though they were always delighted at leave you, but I'll have my revenge some an opportunity of dancing with Jeanette, day." And he disappeared. and paid her fine compliments, ever thought of marrying her.

"Ah! if I had but a good farm," said poor Laurent to himself, "I'd make Jeanette worth being looked after by the best lads in the commune; but with the poor wages of a day laborer, how can I put any thing aside? If the Count of Largoet would only give me some assistance, I would clear some of his land for him, and we should both be gainers by the bargain."

Hunger, they say, brings the wulf out of the forest, and father Laurent, having laid all the plans, paid a visit to the castle of Largoet, and proposed to the Count to take a part of his land and get it in order, if he would make him a good advance.

"Very good," said the Count; "I will give you a hundred crowns, a good herd of cattle, and all the tools you want, but by this time three years you must have cleared, and planted, and hedged, all the land that is allotted to you."

Thoroughly delighted with his bargain, Laurent confidently set to work. He built a cottage for himself and his daughter, and stalls for the cattle; for in those days, with stones could be nut one upon another.

When once they were lodged, the good man engaged laborers, who cut ditches, ding clothes, he came to him and said: pluwed the land, and sowed a great field, twelve months, Laurent found himself far poorer than at the beginning, for he was in the year than at the beginning, for he was in the worse for the most treacherous memory imaginable very favorable opinion of her symptoms;
