A HANDY LAMP.-American ingenuity is not entirely confined to iron clad vessels and engines of War. More peaceful fields of invention and improvement are industriously cultivated, and in nothing has there been more marked and useful changes made than in contrivances for burning Coal Oil. The acme of perfection has been reached at last, however, in a lamp on sale at Pfahden's; Locust street, which, for simplicity, convenience and safety is not to be equaled. It is a chamber lamp with a burner which precludes all danger of bursting the chimheat. It can be carried enfely, without flare or smoke, anywhere, as readily as a fluid lamp without a chimney. We cannot enumerate all its advantages, but advise all consumers of coal oil to examine this little lamp. Larger lamps of the same pattern are also made. ' '

At Pfahler's we also examined a Farmers' Lantern which is as safe as a fire proof safe | doing good. for holding a lamp. It is neculiarly constructed, and must be seen to be appreciated.
