and directed the operations. General Geary's brigade of General Augur's Division, had the advance and maintained it admirably. General Geary's brigade consisted of the Fifth Ohio, Seventh Ohio, Twenty-ninth Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania and Knapp's Battery.

No sooner had these troops taken their places than the Rebels opened musketry fire upon them from two sides and in front, aided by the batteries before mentioned.

The batteries on the mountain also kept up a most destructive fire, but the Federal troops never faltered or even winced. At half past five the battle became general, artillery replying to artillery and infantry to infantry, and desperation was the order of the day. The fight continued until darkness put a stop to the carnage. I have witnessed many battles during this war, but I have seen none where the tenacious obstinacy of the American character was so fully displayed.

Our troops fought with the valor of veterans. No sooner did a volley of musketry or a discharge of artillery mow down the ranks of a regiment, than the gaps were closed up and a new front presented. Regiment vied with regiment and brigade with brigade in deeds of volor; and few instances indeed were there where even individuals faltered.

The Eighth and Twelfth Regulars attached to General Banks' corps, led by Captain Pitcher, did excellent service. Captain Pitcher was wounded severely, though not

With the setting in of darkness the firing of musketry ceased, but the artillery on the mountain kept up a random firing until mountain kept up a random hring data near midnight. At dark our troops with-drew to a small copse of wood about a half a mile to the rear of their first position, were they were joined soon after by the cops of Generals McDowell and Sigel, who formed in their rear.

At nine o'clock in the evening the hungry and wearied troops of General Banks were were relieved by portions of General McDowell's command, and fell back a half a mile, resting on their arms in a pleasant clover

The night was unusually lustrous, and all prominent objects were as plainly distin-guished as in the bright daylight. Thoroughfare Mountain loomed up in the west, a rebel signal light now flashing through space, and our long columns standing by their muskets stretched up and down all the slopes and fields, were dimly described with their faces towards the enemy.
Crawford's brigade, which had borne the brunt of the fight, threw themselves, almost exhausted, upon the moist grass, and talked over the adventures of the battle. Some of the men incautiously made fires, and this revealing our position, the enemy commen-

Their firing was generally excellent, the shells bursting among trains, ambulances and horses, soon complling our soldiers to move back towards Culpepper.

A panic was very nearly occasioned at this time, as the regiment took to their heels to get out of range, and seeing so many men retreating, others that had not reached the field also started to run and soon the roads were crowded with frightened people, roads were crowded with frightened people, who added to the existing misfortunes by telling wild stories of repulse, loss and dispands on demand. telling wild stories of repulse, loss and dis-

About four o'clock in the afternoon General Pope and staff went upon the field, and were greeted with the most vociferous cheers. The General rode to the extreme front in the thickest of the fight, and came near getting into a rebel ambuscade, but he discovered his danger in time to avoid it.

We took several Rebel prisoners, from whom I gained some information. It is cer-tain that the Rebel General Winder is killed. General Jackson is wounded slightly in the hand. General Saxton is mortally

The Rebel force engaged in the battle was from forty to fifty thousand.

The casualties on our side are fully set forth in the list of names I send you of the killed and wounded, now at the hospitals in Culpeper Court House. The list was taken at nine o'clock to day.

General Augur's wound is not dangerous.

It is a flesh wound in the hip. General Geary is severely wounded in the arm.— General Genry had his horse killed under him, as did also the chief of General Pope's Staff, Colonel Ruggles.

Large numbers of hospital tents and stores were sent from Washington to-day to the scene of action.

Culpeper is one vast hospital, though most of the wounded will be sent on to Washington for treatment.

Two pieces of artillery and a large number of small arms were captured from the
