Army Correspondence.

Dear Sey:-Camp life in the barrens of Virginia has become tame, stale, and monotonous; no excitement in the way of henrocats, pig pens, or even fair maidens, to do up the romantic in the life of the poor

"three-years-or-during-the-war" volunteer. In our buts we endeavor to kill time, by building castles in the air, longing for something good to eat or drink, or for a sight at, or a squeze of, the pretty girls we left at home. In the language of Ward, "a gal is a good egg," especially if she loves us and ignores the rascals called Home Guards.

I have no news worth communicating. have seen nothing indicative of future operation; in fact, this great army seems to be hibernating-sucking its paws like the bears. Richmond in front. Washington in rear, it is a difficult problem as to which contains the largest number of enemies to our cause. A mighty earthquake, that would engulf both the Sodom and Gomorrah and all the residents thereof, might do more towards restoring peace and happines to our distracted and unhappy country than the efforts of our armies combined.

Our regiment is now well fed, comfortably hutted, genteelly clad, and in good health. Jacob Breneman, of Co. B, arrived on Saturday, looking pale, but fit for duty. We have not yet received orders for Washington, and perhaps won't. Sorry that we cant go there and permit our "Bowery" friends to go to the country. I know it would please them: us ditto.

We are expecting the pay-master in a few days; until then, my married friends, claim the indulgence of their friends towards their families. Rumor says, that a few hard-hearted landlords are distressing the families of some of our men, who have not been prompt in paying rent. I can scarcely stable and Clerk of Market, were fixed the believe that such barbarism exists in Cosame same as last year: High Constable, lumbia, and will not name the savages now, for fear the good citizens might exterminate the race before we return. > The tide was fulling too fast to make her services avilable, but before she bad given up the task, the Harriet Lanc, then lying near the city, signaled an attack on the town. Although it was night, a beautiful moon plainly revealed everything for miles, and the course of the Rebel gunboats could de distinctly seen. Very soon the Harriet Lane opened her guns upon them, but before many discharges, the Rebels had closed in with her and poured upon her decks hundreds of drunken soldiers. The scene is described as terrible. Out of a crew of 130 men, only ten, it is beleived, are now living. THE OWASCO ENGAGED

The gunboat Owasco, although lying at one of the warves, in a disabled condition, managed to get out to the scene of action but not before the Harriet Lane had surrendered. As soon as the Owasco came within gun-shot, the Rebels opened their batteries on her, striking her several ti es, and carrying away a portion of her rigging. The officers of the Ownsen were not aware of the enoture of the Harriet Lane, until the guns of that vessel were turned on her. The Owasco finding out the true state of affairs, sept a ten-inch shell through the muchinery of the Harriet Lane, and saved herself by that means, it is believed, from capture.

FLAG OF TRUCE-SURRENDER OF THE FLEET DEMANDED.

About nine o'clock in the morning, a boat was sent from the Harriet Lane with a flag of truce in the hands of her only remaining officer, to the Clifton. The officer. who was accompanied by two Rebels, stated that the crew, sorviving the fight, were placed on the deck in such a position that any further firing at the Harriet Lune would, in all probability, do them more harm than the Rebels. Upon the receipt of this statement, there was no further firing on the Harriet Lane. About this time a boat was sent from the shore to the Clifton, with a message from General Magrader demanding the surrender of the fleet, and gave them until 10 o'clock to answer.

A flag of truce was immediatly hoisted on all of our vessels, when Commodore Renshaw upon consultation with his officers, determined to blow up his ship, as she was hopelessly aground. It was further understood that after the Westfield had been destroyed, all vessels that could escape should at once be put to sea.

THE EXPLOSION.

At half-past nine o'clock in the morning, on New Year's day, the order was given to all aboard the Westfield to leave her within fifteen minutes. The Boardman, that had some moments before come up to render assistance, if possible, was selected to take the crew of the flag-ship. A scene of great confusion followed, but in the time given all had left the Westfield but the Comwas entered, and since that time there have on every hundred dollars valuation, and drill and manage my squad, and that is modore, Lieutenant Green, Cirief Engineer Zimmerman and the crew of the Commodore's

The ship had been saturated with turpentine, the magazine opened and the safetyvalve of the engine chained down. Everything being in readiness, the remaining officers and crew, the Commodore standing at the gang-way, applied the match and stepped into his gig. Scarcely had he done so before a premature explosion took place, com-letely destroying the Westfield and the boat and its inmates by her. Thus perished three as brave officers as ever trod the deck of any vessel in our navy.

The ill-fated flag-ship Westfield has been very favorably known since the war. She has been used successfully for blockading purposes, and was in the right at Vicashurg where she distinguished her-self. MORE PARTICULARS OF THE FIGHT.

A Touch Storr .- Bathing in Borneo is attended by its little embarrassments. A traveler tells a story which beats the last sensations of Paris and New York. He says: she saw bathing, dragged him by force to tree, which she compelled him to climb, lodged him in a warm nest, watched him with a feminine jealousy, fed him with fruit and palm cabbage, and forced him to travel from one branch to unother instead of treading on the ground. The tale is a tragedy-for the ungreateful Murett not only ran away at the first opportunity, but afterwards shot the forest syren with a poisoned arrow.
