The product thus obtained if a silicate of magnesia (Mg2 Si.) When this is triturated in a mortar with hydrochlorie (muriatic) acid, it gives off an abundance of gas, which keeps up a lively combustion in the mortar. A bottleful of this gas, prepared by Dr. Hoffman, was let off by a tube through a trough containing dilute hydrochloric meid, and as it escaped in bubbles at the surface of the liquid, these inflamed immediately and spontaneously when they came in sontact with the atmosphere. Each bublle produced a white flame, like that of phosphuretted hydrogen. The combustion formed finkes of silicia, which resembled futures of burning zinc. This is one of the most dangerous gases, and further investigation may prove that many mysterious fires, di-rectly attributed to spontaneous combastion, may be due to it.
