Poetry. THE POP.

You cannot miss him in a crowd, This is how you go; There may be many there as proud, But none so proud to show.

He does not care to touch those, As to be seen himself, He shows his 'puff' to show that he has plenty of the puff.

He goes to see the proudest girls: From all that we have heard, It is to praise their pretty curls,

He goes to see the proudest girls: From all that we have heard, It is to praise their pretty curls, And for their mouths as well.

tem of injectors usually applied, and shows the great and good judgment of the builder. This engine is newly finished, and is certainly a formidable and excellent looking piece of machinery.

Along the road from Columbia to Reading are to be found many objects of interest to strangers, and something always new.

On approaching the depot of the East Penna. railroad, my friend pointed out to me a peak on the mountains that partly circle Reading, known as "the Lover's Leap."

I would attempt a description of Reading ere I leave it—but I fear I should fail in the attempt, at any rate I will say something concerning this handsome city, and "capital of Berks county."

In company with a friend, I soon started for Reading, over the new and excellent road, known as the Reading & Columbia Railroad.

Speaking of the Reading & Columbia Railroad, reminds me of an engine shown me at the celebrated locomotive and machine shop of Messrs. Hayward, Bartlett & Co., commonly known as "Winn's Shops"; a description of which will do you no harm.

The Last Relic.

A young girl, some seventeen years of age, who, clad in deep mourning, knocked at the door of a rich man's house in one of our large cities, and asked eagerly for the owner.

He was indeed a stern man, and apparently hard and unfeeling in his nature. There were deep wrinkles on his brow, which seem to denote that he had not passed through life without partaking of some of its sorrows and some of its cares.

"Sir, I am a stranger and in distress; I am a fatherless child, and my loved mother is now severely ill. For months my hands have labored to sustain her, but poverty comes too fast upon us.

"Look up, young lady," said he. His voice had in it a tone of sympathy, which gave her confidence; and she raised her eyes timidly to the penetrating glance of him in whose presence she stood.

"Let me examine the article which you wish me to buy," he continued; "and although not doing business in that line, yet, perhaps I may be induced to help your present necessities."

Reader, do you ask why? Let me tell you. The jewel—the last relic of that poor, unfriended girl and her afflicted mother—was that of a Mark Master, and it belonged to the only brother of him to whom it was offered for sale.

the sentence comes, "He is worthy of death;" but Cicero's greatest victory is not yet won. He but exerts his power, and the fire which was raging is smothered down into the more lenient punishment of banishment.
