BY JAS. S. WATKINS. It was the first dawn Of a bright Summer's morn, to Nature was robed in her green,

In love's boudoir we met, And I'll never forget That meeting with fair Intogene.

Circassia may cry Of her bright sunny sky, And praise her fair, beautiful girls;

But as yet I've not seen Naught of beauty, I ween, Compared with my Imogene's curls. Round her neck does she keep,

From the caves of the deep, ere naught save the Nalads are seen ; A necklace of coral wha Whose mountain-like thoral
