THE COLUMBIA SPY

But when kind and friendly neighbors Make a charge upon each other, When they charge with boots uplifted, When they charge too high for sprup, When they charge a lie, or falschood, When our exit is demanded, From a public store or side-room. And our rear is strongly threat ened, All because of our refa-al, To submit to such extertion, And to pay such extra prices, Patience which all good men cherish. Conses then to be a virtue. Such a scene our borough witnes Such a tragedy enacted. Such a charge made and demanded, By our hero, young Apollo. When the exit was completed, And the parties reached the pavement, When a vict ry seemed un ertain : Then it was, that young Apollo Marshalled all his younger forces, Three to one in line of battle. it we learn from ancient teachings, That the swift may love at racing, And the strong may lose their battles Also, shown in this engagement. The attacked, though single handed. Proved to be a mighty warrior, Proved to be a second Ajax, Proved too much for young Apollo ; Siezed him by the throat or collar, Tripped his feet from terra firma, Pitched him headlong in the gutter, Furned the battle in his favor. When the youngsters saw their leader, In the ditch a hero fallen, Each was humble as a chicken, Or at least was chicken-heatten And in truth saw that di crettor Was the better part of valor. A retreat was quickly ordered, Or perhaps conceived by instinct To a place of greater safety. This defeat of young Apollo Furnishes a moral lesson, That extortion never prospers, That it always is resisted. And will end as did the struggle Did the struggle with old England, When our sires declined the paymen Of their taxes on their exports, And by way of repression, Poured their Tea in Boston Harbor Whipped again, the growd responded, As our hero, young Ap dio, From the ditch where he had fallen. Blowly orawlod upon the pavement ! Will he fight another duel. Will be seene so fieren and frightful Will the seene so fieren and frightful Will the seenes so dark and b'ool, Drench the classive spot selected, With the blood of his contestant. As the blood drawn from the bladder, lear the grove on Shawaic River, Where he fought the fatal ducl, Of his youthful days departed ' Such is but a faint description, Of this tragic fight by moonlight. Which has made our borough famous,

And her classic name immortal.
